WASHINGTON—The U.S. Supreme Court ruled Tuesday that Goldsboro Christian Schools could be denied tax breaks by the federal government because the school practices racial discrimination and its purpose is "at odds with the common community conscience." By a 8-1 vote, the court decided that the Internal Revenue Service may withhold tax-exempt status for such schools even if the racial policies are dictated by sincerely held religious beliefs.

Two UNC professors have been awarded Fulbright grants for research abroad during the 1983-84 academic year.

Joel Leeb, professor and chairman of endodontics in the School of Dentistry, and Henry A. Landsberger, professor of sociology and research professor of health policy and administration, will conduct their research in Israel and Germany, respectively.

Leeb, who will be working at Hebrew University in Jerusalem, is the first member from the School of Dentistry to receive a Fulbright.

Landsberger will conduct a survey of expert opinion on health educational policy in West Germany, England and Wales. He has also received a grant from the Alexander von Humboldt Foundation.

As of Tuesday, 5,916 students had registered for the first summer session at UNC, said Ben E. Perry, associate director of registration at the records and registration office. This figure does not include the approximately 800 professional students expected to register later, he said.

Those figures are comparable to 1982's first summer session enrollment of 6,632.

As of Monday, the first day of registration, figures indicated a 4.6 percent increase over enrollment at the same time last year.

Associate Professor C. Edson Armi of the University department of art has received an international art history prize.

Armi received the seventh annual art history prize of the International Confederation of Art and Antique Dealers at the organization's general assembly meeting April 23 in Richmond, Va.

He won the award for his three-part manuscript, Mason and Sculptors in Romanesque Burgandy: The New Aesthetic of Cluny III. The prize of $5,000 is intended to aid in financing the publication of the book.

Two Morehead law fellowships, awarded annually by the John Motley Morehead Foundation, were given last week to Harriet Grant of Woodmere, N.Y. and Leslie Calkins O'Toole of Durham.

The fellowships, which are designed "to attract to the School of law... students of superior character, academic achievement and potential," are valued at $4,000 per year plus tuition and fees to cover three years of study at the UNC School of Law.

PARIS—Police used tear gas and water cannons Tuesday in an attempt to break up several thousand students demonstrating near the National Assembly where legislators debated a controversial university reform bill.

Witnesses said the students threw rocks and bottles at police who were attempting to force the demonstrators from the Esplanade des Invalides, a square across the Alexandre III bridge over the Seine in the heart of Paris.

The police went into action after organizers of the demonstration, one of three separate marches on the assembly, gave orders for the protesters to disperse.

After the police fired tear gas and water cannons, the students returned to the large square, sometimes throwing tear gas canisters back at the police.

JERUSALEM—Prime Minister Menachem Begin's government defeated a parliamentary no-confidence motion Tuesday and won a brief respite from a doctors' strike.

Begin's coalition, which has a majority in the Knesset, or parliament, beat back the motion on the economy by a vote of 59-53 with one absentee.

The motion was presented by the opposition Labor Party and the Shinui, or Change, and Communist factions after the state statistics bureau announced that April inflation was 13.3 percent, the highest one-month cost-of-living rise Israel has ever suffered.

Labor's Adi Amrai presented the motion with a sharp attack on Finance Minister Yoram Aridor, claiming his policies were leading the country to bankruptcy.

He accused the government of "squandering" the equivalent of $625 million on Jewish settlements in the West Bank, $3 billion on the Lebanon invasion, $125 million by covering debts incurred by El Al, the national airline, $250 million by refusing to implement daylight saving time and $625 million dollars on maintaining an artificially high value for the shekel to keep inflation down.

NEWARK, N.J.—People Express, still waiting for British approval to begin cheap trans-Atlantic flights, sold more than one-fourth of its summer capacity on Monday—the first day it accepted reservations, airline officials said.

"We're going crazy here," said airline spokesman Russell Marchetta. "We don't have enough people to fill all the demand."

Marchetta said the airline's office here booked 5,408 passengers for flights from Newark to London's Gatwick Airport and 3,392 for Gatwick-Newark flights—or, 8,800 of the 34,400 seats available both ways between today and Sept. 13.

Marchetta said people who made reservations with the airline would not pay until they boarded a plane. He said those who purchased tickets through a travel agent could get refunds from the agent if service is not authorized.

The airline still needs a British permit to start flying the route. A spokeswoman expressed confidence the problem would be solved by today, but British officials were non-committal.
