tuition

will be allowed to pay a lower rate than out-of-state rate" even if they are not state residents. "It would provide some relief," he said.

Grogan said that he does not know exactly how much of an increase the students will face. The finance staff will develop a recommendation for the president to present to the BOG budget finance committee for the full BOG meeting on July 29. The General Assembly also voted that the N.C. legislature will be able to set priorities on BOG spending.

Jordan said the BOG does not have the option of changing the legislature's decision reached on Monday. "In order for us to balance our budget, we will have to agree" to the amount they suggest, he said.

Contrary to rumors circulating on campus, Jordan said anyone enrolling this fall will pay more for tuition. There will be no exceptions or "grandfather clause" arrangements, which could have excluded returning students from the increases. In April, Jordan had told The Daily Tar Heel that he would not be opposed to the idea of drafting an amendment to his bill to allow currently enrolled students to be exempted from the increase, and that he would draft such an amendment if the committee advised him to.

Grogan said tuition increases are not on a graduated scale. "This is not the first step of something," he said. "This is it for now." Adjustments could be made in the future, however, Grogan said.

When asked why UNC must be nationally competitive where tuition rates are concerned, Jordan said, "We want to have excellence. We have always tried to keep tuition low. Even with the increase, we won't be way over other schools in the country."

Tuition increased by 20 percent for residents and 9 percent for out-of-state students in 1981-82.
