

BOG forced to increase UNC tuition

By AMY TANNER
Staff Writer

When students opened their tuition bills this summer, they found that it costs more to be a UNC student than it used to.

Tuition for the academic year has increased 10 percent for in-state students and 26 percent for out-of-state students. In-state students will pay $480 in tuition for the 1983-84 year as opposed to last year's rate of $436. Out-of-state tuition this year is $2,842 and last year's rate was $2,260.

University officials were unsure last week how the tuition increases would affect the enrollment of minority and out-of-state students. Enrollment figures are expected to be available as soon as a head count of this year's freshman class can be taken.

"I always regret any necessary increase because of those who barely had it worked out to come," said Chancellor Christopher C. Fordham III. "It's a modest price, but it's still important to keep it down."

Most financial aid was granted before the tuition hike, and therefore the awards did not make up for the added expense of tuition, said Eleanor Morris, director of student aid.

"The lateness of the decision has caused great problems for students and families," Morris said.

Out-of-state students can write to the financial aid office and request additional aid. "If an out-of-state student needs extra aid, and I don't see why they wouldn't — it was such a substantial increase — they can apply," Morris said.

The Student Aid Office will probably not award extra money to in-state students because the tuition increase is less than $100, she said.

"We're keeping a folder of those who have applied, and at the end of September we will start to see how far our money will go," Morris said.

There should be enough money for those students applying, but the money will probably be in the form of loans or work programs. "There isn't enough scholarship money to compensate," Morris said.

Students interviewed on campus had mixed reactions to the tuition hike.

"I think the increase is a little much for all at once," said Karen Henry, a freshman from New Providence, N.J. "One of the advantages of tuition being lower than comparable schools is that UNC can attract quality students who otherwise might not have been able to attend."

Bob Cook, a sophomore from Albany, Ga., said he has felt the effects of the tuition increase. "It has forced me to get a job, and this makes it harder on me because normally I would not have worked," Cook said.

Brad Knight, a sophomore from Westerville, Ohio, said it was "a sign of poor financial management to increase tuition 26 percent in one year. Hopefully the 26 percent increase didn't turn anyone away who would have added to the Chapel Hill community."

Students must sign draft form to get financial aid

By JOSEPH BERRYHILL
Staff Writer

If you are a UNC male eligible for the draft who expects to receive a federal financial aid check this week, you've got to sign on the dotted line first.

Draft-eligible males must submit a form to the Student Aid Office certifying they have registered for the draft before they can receive federally funded financial aid. Female students born before 1960 and those less than 18 years of age must also sign the form, specifying the reason they have not registered for the draft.

"Any student who has not already signed the form and who is going to get financial aid next week will have to sign that statement," said Eleanor Morris, UNC director of student aid.

About 2,800 of the 9,000 UNC students who receive financial aid have already completed and submitted the compliance forms, Morris said.

Since July 1, the UNC Student Aid Office has not been distributing any financial aid checks to students who have not completed the form. On July 1, a law linking draft registration and the eligibility for federal student aid took effect.

The law, which is an amendment to the Military Selective Service Act, was passed by Congress on Sept. 8, 1982. It specifies that any student required to register with the Selective Service must do so or become ineligible for federal student aid.

Programs which are funded by federal student aid include the Pell Grant, Guaranteed Student Loan and College Work-Study programs.

Colleges may continue to distribute funds to students who have not completed the compliance form until Oct. 1, provided they collect the forms later. Several actions by the Department of Education and Congress have resulted in the extension of this grace period for colleges from Aug. 1 to Oct. 1.

But Morris said that distributing financial aid checks to students without collecting the forms is inefficient, because the Student Aid Office must still go back and collect signatures, Morris said.

"We decided to go ahead and require it now, rather than go back and get it later," she said.

If students who received aid refuse to sign the form later, their names must be turned in to federal officials by the Student Aid Office, she added.

"Collecting the forms now is in the best interest of the students and University," Morris said.

Morris said she was unsure if anyone has yet refused to sign the compliance form, because some students do not pick up checks for unknown reasons. If a check is not picked up by a student, it is automatically cancelled, she said.

"But to my knowledge, no one has just flat out refused to sign it (the form)," Morris said.

Morris said the law would create more paperwork for the Student Aid Office. "It will slow the line down," she said.

Morris also said she disagreed with the method of enforcing the selective service legislation.

"It doesn't seem to me that in the distribution of student aid that that's the place to enforce another law," she said.

Students on financial aid can get checks this week at Vance Hall

By JOSEPH BERRYHILL

Financial aid — the lifeblood for many UNC students — will be distributed at Vance Hall this week, and most students receiving aid should be able to pick up their checks, said Eleanor Morris, UNC director of student aid.

"Most everybody whose application was completed on time and who returned papers on time will get a check," Morris said.

The checks that the Student Aid Office will be distributing this week come from various grant, scholarship and loan programs at the federal and state level, Morris said.

Approximately 6,000 checks are ready to be distributed to about 4,000 students, Morris said. Some students receive more than one check.

Most students expecting job assignments in the Work-Study program should also be able to pick up those assignments next week.

About 700 Work-Study assignments will be ready to distribute this week, and only students who applied late or who are receiving a late award should not have a job assignment.

But assignments for about 100 graduate students who will become teaching assistants under a new Work-Study program may be delayed, Morris said. The Student Aid Office is working with University academic departments to complete the assignments as soon as possible, she added.

About 9,000 UNC students receive student aid, Morris said. Only 4,000 will receive aid checks this week because of late applications and the fact that aid is given throughout the year, she added.

About 10 percent of recipients also receive their checks directly from lending institutions and not the Student Aid Office, Morris said.

A switch-over to an automated system caused some delay in the processing of checks this year, but overall the system has worked well, Morris said.

"We've finished more checks this year than we had at this time last year," she said.

The financial aid checks and job assignments will be distributed by the Student Aid Office from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. today through Thursday at Vance Hall with an alphabetical system based on students' last names. Friday will be a make-up day for students who do not pick up their checks on the correct day.

An official from the Student Aid Office will be near the end of the line to inform students if their checks are not ready, Morris said.

"A student doesn't need to worry about getting in line for 45 minutes and then getting here and finding there's no check," she said.

Morris advised students to come by Vance Hall later in the afternoon to avoid lines which usually form in the morning.

The number of students in line should be about the same this year as last year because the Student Aid Office has had about the same amount of money to distribute, Morris said, adding that budget cuts had not hurt the system this year.

"Congress has not granted the budget cuts that the (Reagan) administration has proposed," she said. "Congress strongly supports programs like Work-Study," she added.

About 1,000 UNC students accept jobs under the Work-Study program, Morris said. But the number of students who work for their financial aid could increase in the future, she said.

"Over the next decade, I think there is going to be an emphasis on work," she said. "Federal programs will emphasize work."

'DTH' needs photographers

The Daily Tar Heel photography department will hire one staff photographer and one stringer for the fall semester. Experience is a requirement.

Anyone interested should bring a portfolio or other examples of their work by the DTH office any afternoon before Thursday at 3:00. Ask to see the photo editor.
