UNC tight end Mike Truitt fumbles after he is hit late in the second quarter by Memphis State linebacker Johnny Walker. MSU recovered two of the Tar Heels' five fumbles.

Black's runback gives Heels a lift

Staff Writer

North Carolina found itself mired in an unexpectedly tough football game with Memphis State late in the third quarter Saturday. The Tar Heels had dominated the game, but the score was tied 10-10, and North Carolina needed a big play. Senior cornerback Walter Black came through.

Black's 73-yard return of a 52-yard Stan Weaver punt put the Tar Heels ahead to stay, and it gave UNC the incentive it needed to put the Tigers away.

Black said he was looking for the big play, but added that the Tar Heels always do.

"We look for the big play at any time," Black said. "That's what makes winning football. Good, consistent play so that when the big play needs to be made, hopefully we will be in the position to make it."

UNC coach Dick Crum said the Tar Heels spend a lot of time each week working on the kicking game.

"In a close game the kicking game can be the difference," Crum said. "I think that was the case today. We work on all of our kicking game a lot each week, and it paid off."

Black said all that practice has helped him to develop a philosophy of punt returning.

"The first priority always is to catch the ball," he said. "Then you try to get upfield as fast as you can. The first few steps are where you cover the most ground, so you can't dance around too much or it allows the defense to get on you."

Black had some trouble catching the football in the first half. He bobbled a pair of Weaver punts, but recovered his own fumble each time. Black said he took his eye off the ball once, and the other error came when he tried to field a bouncing ball.

On his touchdown run, Black concentrated more on catching the ball because of the miscues in the first half.

"The kick I returned was really high and deep, so I just tried to settle back under it as well as I could," Black said. "(Weaver) outkicked his coverage, and it seemed like the coverage team ran into the blocks."

"We set up a wall in the center, and I just accelerated to the wall. The seam opened up on the left, and after I crossed the wall, I looked to the right and I didn't see anyone coming. Then I looked downfield and I saw the kicker was the only one left, and I had Bobby Ratliff out in front."

"After a while, the kicker had backpedaled so much that I knew he would never get me," Black said. "Once I saw the goal line, nothing was going to keep me from getting in, and Ratliff threw a good block."

Black said nobody touched him on the run, and added that it took a while for the touchdown to sink in.

"It really didn't hit me until I got to the sidelines that the score would count," Black said. "I expected to see a flag. It's happened before."

It's been a long time since a North Carolina player returned a punt for a touchdown. The last Tar Heel to do it was Mel Collins, who returned one 42 yards to score against Wake Forest in 1974.

Black said he returned several punts for touchdowns while in high school at East Forsyth in Winston-Salem. "I returned one 89 yards once that I remember," Black said, "and there were several like that."

MSU coach Rex Dockery said the punt return was the most important play of the game.

"We were scared of their return game coming in," Dockery said. When asked what happened on that particular play, Dockery said: "It went all the way is what it looked like to me. We just got blocked. And we didn't keep our poise well after that. It had to be the turning point."

Black finished the day with six punt returns for 98 yards, including the touchdown.

At halftime, Black ran over in his mind what he had to do in the second half.

"I concentrated on what I had to do at the half," he said. "I just thought about having confidence in myself, having confidence in my blocking, and I went out and did what I had to do."
