Tar Heels stick it out against Duke today before heading north

By ROBYN NORWOOD
Staff Writer

Gillian Rattray said it was obvious. She was standing off to the side after North Carolina had played her Penn State team to a 1-1, double-overtime tie Sunday, she had already reassured her players, and now it was time to talk.

"I was pleased ...," she started. "We had scoring opportunities," she said, struggling. And then she tossed away the coachlike demeanor and issued a heretical slip: "North Carolina should be in the Top 10."

Strong language coming from a woman who's seen two national championships come her way and watched one more get wrenched away at the last second.

But over in the North Carolina camp, there were no gasps of surprise. No audible ones, at least. Just the sounds of preparation for a game at Duke today and a New England road trip scheduled for the weekend to drop in on the University of Massachusetts and Springfield (Mass.) College.

UNC beat Duke, 6-0, early last season, but was only able to edge coach Jacki Silar's team, 1-0, in the teams' second meeting late in the season.

Those were two of just six Duke losses in 1983, a season that saw a new school record for victories in a season (14).

Of 18 names on Duke's 1983 roster, nine are seniors, including Pam Stevenson, who tallied 12 goals for the Blue Devils last year to lead an offense that averaged 2.3 goals per game. And the Duke defense recorded 11 shutouts last season. Duke is 1-1, including a 2-0 loss to Penn State Saturday.

The Tar Heels, 2-0-1, counterattack for all that centers around Louise Hines, who in just three games has scored five goals — a third of her team-leading total of 15 last season.

Playing the supporting offensive roles are forwards Sandy Smith (two goals, one assist), Lisa Morin (one goal, one assist) and Mary Sentementes (two assists).

Defensively, goalie Jan Miles' stats are still looking a little odd because she hasn't been forced to make many saves. Jane Jester has managed to stop a couple of goals from her midfield position.

Sentementes' sharp stickwork produced some fast break opportunities in the Penn State game that the Tar Heels weren't able to capitalize on. A fast paced game may be the best thing for UNC against Duke, since the speedy Tar Heels are accustomed to the fast artificial turf.

Friday, in Springfield, Mass., the Tar Heels will face Massachusetts, a team that practically lives in the Top 10.

And before North Carolina can catch its breath, it will meet Springfield Sunday afternoon in a game to be televised on a Springfield cable TV channel.

Springfield returns Diane Lussier, an All-American candidate, to a team that upset then-defending national champion Connecticut.
