Braves GM confident as he looks ahead to 1984

The Associated Press

ATLANTA — Memories of lost opportunities still crowd John Mullen's thoughts, but the general manager of the Atlanta Braves can see another strong contender in the National League Western Division next year.

"Basically, the eight players we put out on the field are pretty darn good," Mullen said Tuesday as the defending division champions were mere television spectators for the opening game of the NL playoffs between the Philadelphia Phillies and Los Angeles Dodgers.

Atlanta, which finished three games behind the Dodgers after blowing a mid-August lead of 6½ games, will return seven of their eight non-pitching starters next year, losing only leftfielder Brett Butler, who was traded to the Cleveland Indians in a deal that brought pitcher Len Barker to Atlanta.

"We felt we had enough strength there (in the outfield) to carry on without him," Mullen said of the Butler deal.

There are plenty of outfield candidates to fill the post — Terry Harper, Brad Komminsk and Albert Hall. The Braves plan to send first baseman Gerald Perry to the instructional league to learn how to play the outfield.

Most of the other positions are set, headed by centerfielder Dale Murphy, third baseman Bob Horner and first baseman Chris Chambliss — the run-producers in the middle of the batting order. Two other starters had career high batting averages — catcher Bruce Benedict (.298) and shortstop Rafael Ramirez (.297) and second baseman Glenn Hubbard had 70 RBIs, his top total ever. Claudell Washington, the other outfielder, played a key role in the September drive to the 1982 division title, but had an off year in 1983, driving in only 44 runs.

The Braves' collapse started on Sunday, Aug. 14, when the Dodgers cut Atlanta's lead to 5½ games after dropping a one-run loss the previous night on Bob Watson's two-run homer in the ninth inning.

"From that time on we kind of went downhill," Mullen said. "Looking back, there were so many games we had chances to win, but we didn't do it."

The starting pitching went sour for a time, and when it recovered, the relief pitching was dismal. Batters didn't help much, either, leaving crucial runs stranded in scoring position, especially in the late innings.

One of the major reasons for the team's poor run production was the loss of Horner, who broke a bone in his wrist Aug. 15 and missed the rest of the season. At the time, Horner was batting .303 with 20 home runs and 68 RBIs. Horner's replacements, Jerry Royster and Randy Johnson, had only 12 RBIs between them in the final 45 games, a stretch in which Atlanta posted only a 17-28 record.

The Braves have asked for waivers to unconditionally release pitcher Tommy Boggs, who missed most of the 1983 season with a shoulder injury.
