

Women's soccer team wins tournament in D.C.

From staff reports

In what Coach Anson Dorrance called "the biggest pre-NCAA tournament that we will participate in," the North Carolina women's soccer team continued to justify its No. 2 ranking with a 2-1 victory over George Mason Monday in the championship game of the W.A.G.S. Tournament in Washington, D.C.

Amy Machin and April Heinrichs each scored goals in leading the Tar Heels to their fifth straight victory in three days at the tournament. It was the team's second consecutive championship in the W.A.G.S. event.

The Tar Heels defeated 19th-ranked William and Mary, and Texas, Saturday, and third-ranked Cortland (N.Y.) State, and George Washington Sunday en route to the championship game.

The win over George Mason improved UNC's record to 11-1. The Tar Heels winning streak now stands at 11.

UNC's next game is at 2 p.m. Saturday on Fetzer Field against Radford.

The North Carolina women's golf team took fourth place in the Duke Fall Invitational in Durham last weekend, posting a three-day total of 922 to finish 13 strokes behind winner N.C. State, which finished at 909.

Wake Forest finished second in the team race with a 913 total, while Duke finished third in the 12-team field at 916. Wake's Brenda Corrie took medalist honors with a three-round total of 217.

Cathy Johnston was the highest UNC finisher, placing sixth with a 227 total, despite a final round 81. No other UNC golfer finished in the top 10.

North Carolian travels to Lexington, Ky., Thursday to compete in the University of Kentucky's Lady Kat Invitational. The Tar Heels return to Chapel Hill to host the Lady Tar Heel Golf Tournament at Finley Golf Course Oct. 21-23.

Bob Bosworth led a contingent of eight North Carolina fencers with a sixth-place finish in the epee competition in the Atlanta Open last weekend.

Bosworth's finish was the best among the UNC fencers in their first tournament of the season. Lonnie McCullough, Richard Hoile and Tony Sharpe finished eighth, 10th and 11th, respectively, in the sabre competition.

Co-captain Amiel Rossabi advanced to the third round of the foil competition before falling to more experienced fencers, some of whom represented the United States in the Pan American games in Venezuela in August.

North Carolina's women's soccer team won five games in three days to capture its second consecutive W.A.G.S. Tournament in Washington, D.C. Above, Kathy Kelly in an earlier game.

Perseverance the key to Murray's comeback

By GLENN PETERSON
Staff Writer

Perseverance.

Holly Murray, a sophomore co-captain of the women's cross country team, knows a lot about this word. Murray has been able to fight off many difficulties in becoming a leader on her team.

Coach Don Lockerbie says Murray's perseverance is her greatest asset. "Her first three weeks (at North Carolina) were filled with tears," Lockerbie said. "She didn't think she was as good as the other girls on the team. The heat, humidity and distance were not easy on her. She persevered, though."

Murray's perseverance has paid off this year. She has finished second for UNC in both of the team's races this season. Murray's performance against Virginia spurred the Tar Heels to victory against the defending national champions.

"For Holly to finish fourth ahead of all the Virginia girls was the greatest factor in our winning the race," Lockerbie said. The Tar Heels won that race by a single point.

Running has interested Murray since junior high school because one of her older brothers ran for his school team. "My brother encouraged me to run, so I ran both cross country and track in ninth grade," Murray said. Murray worked hard enough to run to a second place finish at the National Junior Olympics Cross Country Championship.

The decision to come to UNC was not too difficult for Murray. "I sent out resumes to different schools, and I decided to come down here on a recruiting trip," she said. "Don (Lockerbie) was really impressive, and the business school was ranked pretty high. After coming down here, I knew I wanted to go to school here."

"I knew Carolina was trying to improve its program. I also wanted to go where the competition was toughest. (Four ACC schools were in the top 20 in the preseason women's cross country rankings.) We were strong when I got here last year, and we are even stronger this year. We still have a lot of potential."

It hasn't been easy for Murray to reach her potential. She had to adjust to leaving her nine brothers and sisters at home in Pennsylvania last year, and she had to miss the ACC championship race because of a bronchitis attack.

Murray had been selected to run for a team from the United States in Israel last summer. However, she was unable to make the trip because she had mononucleosis. That caused her to get off to a slow start this fall.

The hard times are over for now, and Murray is concentrating on having a successful cross country season. "Last year, I was sick during cross country season," she said. "This year I'm having a good time, and I'm working hard."

Joan Nesbit, the other co-captain, speaks highly of Murray's unselfishness. "Holly is always giving," Nesbit said. "She gives as a friend, and she gives during a race. Holly's a diamond in the rough — a gem."

Both Nesbit and Lockerbie are quick to point out Murray's leadership qualities. Lockerbie said Murray's leadership started with perseverance and had a lot to do with her being the most likeable woman on the team. Nesbit said Murray was a silent leader.

"She leads by example," Nesbit said. "She has the gutsiest attitude on the team."

Murray's attitude might help her reach her two individual goals this year. "My main goals are to make the nationals in cross country, and in track in either the 3,000-meter race or the 5,000-meter race," Murray said.

After she graduates, Murray said she'd like to run in Europe. Running in Europe is the premier hope for a distance runner.

But for now, Murray is concentrating on team goals. "We need a good performance from every individual to go to nationals as a team," Murray said. "I think we have a real good chance to make it. We have to believe we can do it."
