Reed looking for some answers

By FRANK KENNEDY Assistant Sports Editor

How bad are things with North Carolina State football? According to Wolfpack coach Tom Reed, they are about as miserable as can be expected.

"It's been like a hockey game," Reed said in an interview Monday. "I've been drawing the X's and O's, but when the players get out on the ice we find that they can't skate."

Now surely, coach, the situation can't be all that bad? After all, this team is 2-3, not a dismal 0-5 like Duke, for instance. Surely, there's some hope?

"Well, we're not as bad as our record indicates," Reed said. "But right now, it's desperate. We have got to learn to pass, block, run, throw and kick."

Reed's Wolfpack, coming off its worst performance of the year (a 20-10 loss to Georgia Tech), is suffering heavily from three things, said Reed: bad blocking, a secondary wiped out by injuries and a wide receiver corps depleted because of academic problems.

"We don't even have the luxury of thinking about Carolina right now," he

From staff reports

Sue Walsh has added yet another award to her already long list of honors.

The senior UNC swimmer and Olympic candidate was awarded the Southland Olympia Award at Kenan Fieldhouse Tuesday.

The award, sanctioned by the U.S. Olympic Committee, is designed to recognize and reward top amateur athletes in the 31 Olympic sports, and has been presented to Tracy Caulkins, Greg Louganis, Carl Lewis and Alberto Salazar since the 1980 Olympics. Walsh has received 21 All-American honors through three years at UNC and shares or holds 17 ACC records. She has competed in the World University Games twice and this summer won two gold medals and one silver medal in the Pan American Games.

To do just that, Reed held intrasquad scrimmages Monday, yes, the kind they normally hold during preseason, and he said he didn't plan to prepare his squad for the Tar Heels until later in the week.

"We're just not a real good team right now," he said, "and this is our biggest game of the year in many respects."

Reed said that when he does begin looking at the Tar Heels, he isn't going to have much fun. "It's amazing," he said. "I was looking at their Tech films and they had 271 yards passing, then against Wake they had 440 yards rushing.

"How do you stop them? I don't have any idea. If you play the run tight, they'll pass over you; and if you lay off the line too much, they'll run right down your throat."

Reed said he isn't sure what the morale of his troops is like, but he added that it couldn't be very high. However, he said he hopes the Tar Heel-Wolfpack rivalry will have a positive impact on his squad. "It had better help," he said.

Crum downplays emotion of N.C. State rivalry

By FRANK KENNEDY Assistant Sports Editor

The emotion and excitement of the North Carolina-N.C. State rivalry generally stays in the stands, UNC football coach Dick Crum says.

"The emotion is really for the fans," Crum said, adding that he doesn't believe it's good for his players to get overly emotional about one game.

"(The fans) are the ones that get hyper and excited about it," Crum said in his typically mild-mannered fashion. "But it doesn't really get to our youngsters all that much."

Saturday, the Tar Heels will travel to Carter-Finley Stadium in Raleigh to face a Wolfpack team that, frankly, has been something of a mystery in recent weeks.

Carolina, the Wolfpack came back to trounce The Citadel, only to fall to the likes of Virginia, roll over Wake Forest, then get outplayed by previously winless Georgia Tech.

"I don't pay attention to their past record, because you can't really do that in this game," Crum said. "Their kids played hard, and their defense has done a pretty good job."

Crum said that State will give the Tar Heels its best shot, regardless of how it's been playing lately. "In (quarterback Tim) Esposito, (fullback Vince) Evans and (tailback Joe) McIntosh they have three very good guys back there in the I-formation," he said. "We'd take those guys on our club."

But it's a good bet that State coach Tom Reed could find many more players he'd like to draft from UNC than Crum could ever hope to find on the Wolfpack.

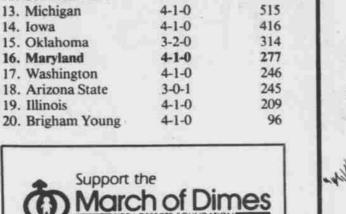

Crum on the UNC tailback situation: "We haven't decided who will start this week (Ethan Horton or Tyrone Anthony). We'll wait until later in the week. I'm comfortable with either guy, it's just a matter of who happens to be in there on the first play."

On Eddie Colson's performance against Wake: "His emergence as a 100-yard back enhances our offense, and gives other defenses another little problem. In the past, our fullbacks have been blockers, not runners."

Notes:

UNC right tackle Joe Conwell was chosen Atlantic Coast Conference player of the week, along with quarterback Mike Eppley of Clemson. Conwell was graded at 90 percent in his line duty against Wake Forest.

Junior Jacky Hagenbach scored two first-half goals to lead the UNC field hockey team to a 4-0 victory over Appalachian State Tuesday afternoon in Boone. Louise Hines and Bonnie Davis also scored for UNC. The Tar Heels' record now stands at 6-1-3.
