

Rain adds inch and a half to lake

By SALLY SMITH

The rainfall greeting students as they returned from Fall Break will help Orange Water and Sewer Authority breathe a little bit easier about the critical local water shortage.

As of Sunday afternoon, 1.72 inches of rain had fallen since Thursday, resulting in a 1 1/2 inch increase in the University Lake level from 58 1/2 inches Thursday to 57 inches below full Sunday.

The lake level should come up quite a bit more, at least a couple of inches by the time the rainfall is over, said OWASA spokesman Pat Davis.

Water consumption for Thursday, Friday and Saturday averaged about 4 million gallons a day.

Students being out of town contributed to this drop, Davis said.

"If it keeps raining like this for awhile, we would be in considerably better shape," Davis said. "Any rain helps out, if it is prolonged and steady."

However, it will have to rain a lot more before mandatory water restrictions will be lifted, Davis said. "Even with the mandatory restrictions, we're still in a fairly serious situation."

At Tuesday night's Orange County Commissioners' meeting, OWASA executive director Everett Billingsley said board members showed concern about the low level of Orange Lake, north of Hillsborough and the Eno River.

OWASA depends on 1 1/2 million gallons of water a day from Orange Lake, Billingsley said. The lake also services Hillsborough and the Orange-Alamance water system.

Boone announces intent to run again

Incumbent John Boone recently announced his candidacy for a seat on the Carrboro Board of Aldermen.

Boone has been endorsed by the Association for a Better Carrboro, a conservative political action group.

Asked which were the key issues in this election, Boone said that the Thoroughfare Plan and the Interstate 40 extension through Orange County would probably be most important to the area. Boone also said, however, that the Board of Aldermen has already approved the Thoroughfare Plan and now the decision is in the hands of the Chapel Hill Town Council.

Concerning the water shortage, Boone said that he had voted against using Cane Creek as a supplementary water source for the area. Parts of Jordan Lake recently have been approved for this purpose, he said, so Cane Creek is not the only alternative. Boone said it would also be cheaper if the water could be drawn from Jordan Lake instead of Cane Creek.

Boone said that as with any other election, the bottom line will be which candidate will best promote "open and honest government."

Boone, 54, is a lifetime resident of Carrboro. He is employed by the UNC purchasing department.

Boone has served 12 years on the Board of Aldermen. He was appointed to two, two-year terms and is now serving in the second of his four-year elected terms.

Boone is one of six candidates seeking a seat on the board. Three seats, in addition to the mayor's, are up for election. Other candidates for the board are Zora Norwood, Doug Anderson, Doris Foushee, B. Willis Wilson and Bill Koole.

Municipal elections will be Tuesday, Nov. 8.

into the lobby... and detonated, collapsing all four floors."

He said the bomber drove a pickup truck into an airport parking lot adjacent to the Marine compound where a sentry spotted it and radioed headquarters. Then the truck accelerated, smashed through an iron gate, roared over a sand-bagged guardpost and smashed into the lobby of the atrium-style building, he said. It was unclear whether sentries fired at the truck.

Gen. Francois Cann, commander of the French contingent, said the explosions at the French and American camps came 20 seconds apart, though early reports indicated a two-minute gap.

The number of French casualties was unclear. Lebanese state radio said as many as 100 were killed. French officials in Paris said their figures showed three dead, 14 wounded and 56 missing. However, French medical teams said 15 had been brought out dead. Later, state television quoted security sources as saying 20 French had been killed and 14 wounded.

Cann said a suicide terrorist also drove a truck used in the bomb attack on the French contingent in the Ramel el-Baida section of Beirut. But French soldiers on the scene said it might have been a car.

When asked who was responsible, Cann said, "We have evidence of who did it." He did not elaborate.

U.S. officials in Lebanon also refused to speculate about who might have carried out the attacks, which resembled the U.S. Embassy bombing in Beirut on April 18 that killed 17 Americans and 32 Lebanese. U.S. officials blamed that explosion on pro-Iranian Lebanese extremists.

Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger said on CBS's Face the Nation that "circumstantial evidence" pointed to Iranian fanatics.

At least eight U.S. and French navy ships pulled close to shore off Beirut after the explosions as helicopters ferried the dead and wounded away from the blast sites. U.S. officials said the severely wounded were evacuated to hospitals in Cyprus and West Germany.

The explosions came one day after a Navy convoy with 2,000 Marines assigned to replace the Beirut contingent was diverted to the Caribbean because of the unstable political situation in Grenada, where 1,000 U.S. nationals live. Many of the Marines killed Sunday had been preparing to leave.

"I know there are no words that can express our sorrow and grief for the loss of those splendid young men and the injury to so many others," President Reagan told reporters in Washington.

Reagan vowed to keep the Marines there despite the bombings, which he called a "despicable act."

French Defense Minister Charles Hernu flew to Beirut from Paris to inspect the devastation, and French government sources quoted him as calling the attacks "odious and cowardly."

Previously, six Marines had been killed in Beirut sniper attacks and a seventh died in a land-mine explosion.

Departments within the College of Arts and Sciences also have a small folder on each student majoring in that field. "This information is only that which narrowly pertains to the student's major," said Frederick Vogler, associate dean in the College of Arts and Sciences.

College of Arts and Sciences Assistant Dean John Florin said the files are only given to outside agencies if the student signs a waiver requesting that they be released or if a representative of an employer is given written consent from the student.

"I've found that our most difficult problems arise when parents, who have no more right than anyone else to see these files, request confidential information," he said.

The confidentiality of student files greatly increased with the passage of the Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act in 1974. Before the act, "the files were less accessible to students and more accessible to outside agencies," said Raymond Strong, director of records and registration.

"Students could not just come in and see their files like they can today," he said.

Strong said that only students, deans, advisers and other University faculty with a legitimate academic interest in the student may view the central records kept in Hanes Hall. Students wishing to see their folders need to make an appointment at the Records and Registration office in Hanes.

Companies and other outside agencies can view the files only after a student has signed a waiver form. But some information, such as home addresses and schedules, are considered public information and can be released without the student's approval. Strong said.
