

Death toll 104 at end of 'Assassin'

By AMY BRANEN
Staff Writer

The battle between Graham and Aycock has been a bloody one with a final death count of 104. It officially ended before Fall Break with a duel between the final two survivors.

The duel was fought at a dorm mixer in the lower quad between senior Chris Jackson of Aycock and junior Waleed Irani of Graham. The duelers stood back to back, walked five paces and turned. After much dodging, chasing and shooting, Irani finally came out the victor, winning a dinner for two at Slug's. Jackson got a free dinner for two at Papagayo Mexican Restaurant for coming in second.

After his win, Irani attributed his success to "laying low and lots of twists."

It was all part of the game "Assassin" which began several weeks ago between the two residence halls. Since then, residents of Graham and Aycock have been spying, hiding out, assuming other identities and hiring other students as body guards. There have been late night raids in both halls.

"People would come to raid the dorm and they'd wind up staying and talking to each other and getting to know some of the people on the hall," said Stuart Long, a Graham resident assistant. "The point of the game was to get to know each other. I think it worked pretty well."

In "Assassin," players get a tombstone-shaped piece of paper with the name of their victim written on it. The point is to shoot your victim before your assassin gets you. The player left "alive" takes the name assigned to his victim and the game continues until two people are left to battle it out like Jackson and Irani.

Graham freshman Stuart Levinson, one of the last remaining participants, shot the most people.

"I killed 14 people," he said. "I shot them all in the back. One girl I waited for outside her Bible class. I shot her when she came out, she started beating me up with her Bible."

Laura Gamble, an Aycock resident assistant who also helped plan the game, said that several other dormitories were interested in playing the game.

NCSL active in work with state and national issues

By LIZ SAYLOR
Staff Writer

Since 1937, the N.C. Student Legislature at UNC has been actively working with state and national government, researching and writing bills and resolutions for presentation and debate throughout the year.

And some prominent N.C. politicians got their start in NCSL, including Gov. Jim Hunt, former Gov. James Holshouser, former Sen. Robert Morgan, N.C. Secretary of Labor John Brooks and Charlotte mayor and gubernatorial candidate Eddie Knox.

The Annual Session in March is the highlight of the NCSL year, a week-long session where delegates present bills to the NCSL body at the Old Capitol Building in Raleigh.

Other activities include a reception for state legislators and alumni, extensive bill debates, election of NCSL officers and speeches from state and national leaders. Each delegation has 18 votes in the House and two in the Senate. After NCSL legislation has passed, it is compiled and presented to the General Assembly and prominent state leaders for consideration each year. More than 40 percent of NCSL's bills have been written into laws.

NCSL incorporated in 1973 as a non-profit, non-partisan educational organization. It is financed mainly by tax-deductible contributions from individuals, corporations and foundations in North Carolina.

Involved with both Democratic and Republican city, county and state officials, as well as legislators, attorneys and businessmen, NCSL's initiatives on key state issues have been successful. NCSL also sponsors many civic activities from voter registration drives to providing high school internships to making citizens more aware of state issues.

At UNC, the NCSL has at present 40 members, and the officers are: Chairperson Mary Roff, Vice-Chairperson Katy Whitener, Secretary Dawn Peters and Treasurer Randy Brantley. Their adviser, Thad Beyle, also teaches Political Science 96, a 3-hour course in which 60 percent of the grade is based on participation in NCSL. A student who takes this course must write one resolution, as well as a paper, for the class. Roff said, "You have to participate in everything for an A, but they'll be putting more leeway in it. It makes NCSL more fun, you're more aware of all the goings-on."

NCSL meets every Tuesday evening, except for the Tuesdays following an Interim Council. It receives funding from Student Government, just as any other organization, and sometimes works with Student Government, as well as other student organizations, on various projects.

"We've got a great group this year," Roff said. "Anyone can join anytime. Just pay your $5 dues, and you can be as involved as much as you want to."

Describing how the Chapel Hill delegation compares with other school's delegations when voting on resolutions, Roff said, "Charlotte, Campbell, schools like that tend to stick together. Chapel Hill always splits straight down the middle. We've got too many independently minded people."

There are 27 member colleges and universities across the state. Delegations from these schools hold monthly Interim Councils September through April which usually run for two days.

CAMPUS CALENDAR

Public service announcements must be turned into the box outside the DTH offices in the Carolina Union by 1 p.m. if they are to be run the next day. Only announcements from University recognized and campus organizations will be printed. All announcements must be limited to 25 words and can only run for two days. In the event that the Calendar does not run because of space limitations, groups should turn in announcements at least two days in advance to ensure they are run at least once.

Northwestern's Master's Program in Journalism

The Medill School of Journalism at Northwestern University offers a tradition of excellence. Aspiring journalists will find Medill has a practical program designed to encourage students to learn by doing.

Students are taught in three settings. In Evanston, classes meet regularly. Often using urban and suburban resources for class projects and news stories. In downtown Chicago, newspaper and broadcast students use the city as a laboratory and produce deadline stories in a bustling newsroom facility. And in Washington, D.C., newspaper students cover the nation's capital for client newspapers while broadcast student appear on local news stations across the country as Washington correspondents.

MEDILL

Medill offers specific training for those interested in reporting and writing, newspaper management, magazine management, broadcast journalism, and advertising.

A recruiter will be at the Career Planning and Placement Office Tuesday, October 25th from 9:00 am to 12:00 pm to talk more about the program. Those interested in financial aid will benefit by the interview process. Contact Marcia B. Harris (962-6507) if you are interested. If you cannot attend this session, write for further information: Medill School of Journalism, 1845 Sheridan Road, Evanston, Illinois 60201.
