

V-ball gets 1st ACC loss

Mistakes cost UNC in Raleigh

By MIKE WATERS
Staff Writer

When North Carolina and N.C. State, the ACC's two undefeated volleyball teams, got together in Raleigh Wednesday night, the outcome was sure to have a great effect on the pairings for the ACC tournament Nov. 18-20 in Durham.

The 15-12, 15-9, 7-15 and 15-7 Wolfpack victory came close to clinching the tournament's top seed for N.C. State. The loss dropped the Tar Heels into the opposite bracket as the tournament's No. 2 seed. Only two N.C. State losses in its last two conference matches can keep the Wolfpack from occupying the top berth.

The match was a demonstration of how the Tar Heels' inconsistent play has hurt them in several important matches this season.

North Carolina was plagued by mental errors and unforced mistakes that State turned into two quick and demoralizing victories.

"We lacked mental toughness and overall intensity," coach Beth Miller said. "We made a lot of mental errors. We were out of position and we lacked on-court communication."

The statistics back up Miller. In just four games, North Carolina had 19 serve-receive errors, which means the Tar Heels weren't setting their big guns at the net or forcing State to play the controlled, physical game the Tar Heels enjoy.

"I thought N.C. State played well, but we made too many mental errors," she said. "We'll have to go back and work on the fundamentals now."

The second game of Wednesday's match, which N.C. State won 15-9, and the third game, which North Carolina won 15-7, displayed the inconsistency that has crippled the Tar Heels.

UNC was victimized by seven serve-receive errors, effectively awarding the game to the Wolfpack. North Carolina turned the tide in the third game as Linda Kantz passed for 12 assists and freshman Jill Berkebile drilled seven kills.

"It was more understandable earlier in the year," Miller said. "We should have more mental toughness and on-court communication by now, though."

Miller still thinks the Tar Heels are capable of beating State if the teams were to face each other again in the ACC's.

"I don't think we're the favorite, but we're also not the dark-horse," she said. "This year maybe we'll have a little bit more to prove in the tournament."
