Petitions planned on dorm cable TV

By CHRIS EDWARDS
Staff Writer

UNC students may be spending more of their spare time in the future sitting in front of television sets if proposals discussed at Thursday's Student Television for UNC meeting become realities.

At the meeting, Mark Dalton, Residence Hall Association President, described initial plans for getting cable television installed in UNC's dormitories.

Dalton said a petition drive would begin this week to measure student interest in installing cable TV in the common rooms of dormitories. A straw poll of the 40 in attendance at the meeting showed unanimous support of cable installation. Dalton added, however, that installation of cable is a long-term project and "cannot be done in one or two years."

Dalton said that South Campus would probably be the first area to receive cable TV once a decision is made to put it in, "since it is not the historic site North Campus is." Cables can be run above ground on South Campus.

North Campus poses a problem, however. "Cables would have to be run underground, and digging would deface the campus," said Dalton. "We will have to phase cable in; we can't get the whole campus in one shot."

"The expense of installing cable must be borne in housing contracts," said John Wilson, co-chairman of STV for UNC. However, he continued to say that cable could cost as little as $2.50 per student for each semester.

Cable installation in the dorms has become an issue lately because of planning for a student-operated cable TV station.

The Finance Committee recommended Wednesday that $700 be allocated to STV for purchasing equipment and taking care of administrative needs for the station. And the student fee increase, to be voted on again in February, will provide a large part of STV funding if it is passed.

Wilson said estimated operating costs of STV would be about $36,000 per year.

Also during the meeting, Sandy Rogers, president of Duke Union Community Television, discussed the structure of Duke's student television system and offered to help UNC's STV get started.

Rogers said the STV system at Duke was the largest student-operated television station in the country. Regularly scheduled shows, news, specials and football and soccer games take up the majority of the programming.

Rogers added that Duke student TV provided excellent training for students interested in jobs in the communications industry. "We place a lot of people with Cable News Network during the summer," Rogers said.
