Scientist calls Lucy key to human origin

By MARYMELDA HALL Staff Writer

"I think there are a number of common denominators all humans share — where we come from, how we got here, who we are," Donald Johanson said in a presentation Tuesday night.

About 500 people braved a steady downpour and slogged to Memorial Hall to hear Johanson, a renowned paleoanthropologist, author and "old bones pusher." Johanson's slide lecture was titled "Searching for Our Ancestors."

"We are a special species," Johanson said. "We have a fascination for unraveling mysteries, and we're also able to piece together the puzzle. We just don't have a boxtop picture to the puzzle of our ancestors."

The hypothetical picture of what happened millions of years ago is always changing, Johanson said. "Lucy is one of the pieces to the puzzle that there were no spots for, so we had to rearrange the puzzle."

Lucy is the oldest, most complete skeleton of any erect-walking human ancestor ever found. Johanson and Tom Gray, one of his students, discovered Lucy in 1974 in the Afar region of Ethiopia.

Lucy's gender was determined from the size of her pelvis and her small stature of about 3½ feet. She was in her early 20s and weighed about 50-55 pounds when she died. She got her nickname from the Beatles' song "Lucy in the Sky with Diamonds," Johanson said.

Perhaps even more important than the discovery of Lucy was the discovery of the First Family in 1975, Johanson said. The First Family is the fossilized remains of at least 13 individuals, children and adults. This discovery marked the first recovery of an associated group of individuals.

"We don't just take shovels and start digging to find these fossils," Johanson said. "We walk and survey the land, looking for fossils that are eroding out of deposits."

One of the earliest hints of hominid remains in the Afar region was Johanson's discovery of a knee joint in 1973. "I had done extensive graduate work on teeth," he said, "so naturally I found a knee joint."

Johanson also spoke about other important discoveries

Donald Johanson spoke Tuesday in Memorial Hall about Lucy, the oldest, most complete skeleton of an erect-walking human ancestor ever found.

in the field of paleoanthropology, including anthropologist Mary Leakey's discovery of footprints in Laetoli, Africa. "At least two human ancestors left their trail in the white volcanic ash of the region," Johanson said. "The foot is smaller than the human foot and has a large toe, but it was adapted to walking on the earth," he said.

"When I was at a party in Berkeley, or Beserkly, someone asked me what my fantasy was. I told them I hoped one of these Laetoli hominids had tripped and fallen on his face," Johanson said.

Johanson believes his species Australopithecus afarensis is the trunk of the evolution tree, the ancestor for two separate branches, one leading to Australopithecus robustus and the other to Homo sapiens, modern man.

Johanson has published more than 50 scientific and popular articles that detail his work. His book Lucy: The Beginnings of Humankind, which tells the complete story of his fossil discoveries, received the American Book Award in the science book category in the Spring 1982.

Johanson currently serves as the director of the Institute of Human Origins in Berkeley, Calif. He has said he intends to develop the institute into the primary center for human research in the United States.

"If we can accept the undeniable fact that all humans can be traced back to a common origin, then we can contemplate where we're going. If the destiny of this species is a common destiny, we will have a long and successful future," Johanson said. "It would be a tremendous tragedy if someone pushed the button, because then there would be no one a thousand years from now to piece together the puzzle."

'DTH' staff meeting set for Monday

There will be a mandatory meeting for all DTH staffers Monday night at 9:30 in the Union. Check the schedule for the room number. Be there.

He said that each dorm is equipped with fire alarm systems hooked up to the county emergency communication system and that the campus fire alarm systems will be hooked up to a campus police monitoring system within a year.

"I feel that we are prepared to deal with any situation involving a gas leak, chemical spill or a fire," Sherman said. "What we're not prepared for are things like freak storms such as tornadoes."

"That is one of my biggest concerns about the campus, because I'm not sure how we would get in touch with people to warn them. Then again, we're not in the tornado belt, so we might never have to worry about it," Sherman said.

Flury also said there was no plan for an all-campus emergency.

"Every building has an exiting plan concerning anything like a tornado, but we would want to keep people in the buildings in that case."

methods fail, they go to the world press and identify the torturer and the victim.

If Amnesty doesn't know a person is being tortured in a particular country, then the country assumes it won't be caught, Healey said. By applying pressure to the human rights violators, he said, Amnesty is in effect cutting down on the torture.

"Nobody wants to be known as a torturer, and if we identify them, half the time the torture ceases," he said.

Often, Healey said, he was asked to compare the emphasis on human rights in the Carter administration with the Reagan administration. He said that Jimmy Carter was now a member of Amnesty and he said that his administration was responsible for making human rights a household word.

"I don't like to compare one administration to the next," he said. "We try to work with whoever is in office to reach our goals."

Amnesty, which has 288 local prisoner of conscience adoption groups, is a highly centralized and a highly disciplined movement, Healey said. People think Amnesty is a left-wing organization, but in the United States it is a centralist group, he said. It is an international human rights organization critical of any country that is guilty of human rights violations. "In this country we are trying to abolish the death penalty, which we feel is a blatant violation of human rights," he said.

Wednesday's air raid was the second since the Tyre bombing that killed 29 Israelis and 32 Lebanese prisoners. The first reprisal raid came within hours of the truck bomb explosion and was against bases of Syrian-supported Palestinian guerrillas in Lebanon.

"It is our policy to hit wherever there are terrorists who initiate action against us," the Foreign Ministry official said.

Israel's defense minister, Moshe Arens, has accused Syria of supporting a "network of terrorists" including pro-Iranian Shiite Muslims and Palestinian guerrillas.

Shortly before the air raid was launched, an Israeli soldier was wounded by small arms fire near Tyre, the Israeli military command said. Israeli troops closed the main coastal highway linking Tyre with the rest of Lebanon. Beirut radio stations reported.

The new U.S. Middle East envoy, Donald Rumsfeld, arrived from Cairo and met with Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir. Talks were expected to focus on Shamir's trip to Washington later this month and the efforts to achieve reconciliation between warring factions in Lebanon.
