Student injured... A UNC student apparently fell from the 5th floor of Morrison Dormitory early Wednesday, according to unofficial reports.

Timothy Humanik, a freshman from Charlotte, was listed in serious condition Wednesday, said Sid Mitchell, administrator on call at North Carolina Memorial Hospital. He was expected to undergo surgery Wednesday night, Mitchell said.

University Police could not be reached for verification, but Lt. Ralph Pendergraph of the Chapel Hill Police Department said the Chapel Hill Police responded to the call as emergency medical service providers.

New systems... new photocopy system will be installed in the Health-Sciences library beginning this January. The primary feature of the new system is that coins will no longer be needed to operate it. Instead, a plastic, magnetically coded "Vendacard" will be available from a vending machine on the ground floor of the library. The card can be inserted into the copier instead of coins. With the card, a user can make 21 copies (an average of 4.76 cents per copy.)

Once again... John P. Evans, professor of business administration, was reappointed to a second five-year term as dean of the UNC School of Business Administration. The new term begins April 20.

Fifteen attend meeting

Dorm integration and race relations discussed

By HEIDI OWEN
Staff Writer

Dorm integration and race relations in general were the topics discussed at the Chancellor's Committee meeting on race relations in Rosenau Hall Wednesday. Three faculty members and 12 students attended the meeting, chaired by William Small, assistant dean of public health.

Student task forces concerned not only with racial integration but also with the problem of racial separation in general voiced their opinions for the committee to report to the Administrative Council in February.

"There is definite concern about the racial problem in dormitories," Small said. He was backed by statements from Jennifer Ayer, coordinator of People Acting Against Racism, as well as other students at the meeting.

"There is clearly a disproportionment of representation of black students on campus," Small said.

Anna Giattina, who wrote her honors thesis on UNC housing, said that in the past, various institutional mechanisms within the system played a role in the separation of races and as a result the black population built up on South Campus.

Now students have a preference in dorm choice, but the majority of blacks desire to be on South Campus," Chancellor's Committee member James Exum said.

"It's really a matter of comfort and security," Kevin Jones, a member of Kappa Alpha Psi fraternity, said. "Many blacks don't feel comfortable in a situation such as the one on North Campus."

Angie Robbins, chairman of the Student Government task force, expressed three alternatives to the present situation.

"You can't change attitudes simply by changing someone's dorm," Robbins said. "Three alternatives could be a step in the direction of changing previous attitudes: the roommate questionnaire could be extended, orientation and orientation could be integrated, and more cultural programs could be provided on North Campus."

The consensus at the meeting was that there were essentially two problems on the University Campus: what to do with the black students on North Campus to make them feel more comfortable and how to integrate more black into North Campus.

Giattina said she believed that in order to accomplish this integration "we must create incentives for blacks to move from South Campus and we must provide the mechanisms to do it."

Small said, "Blacks are as diverse as whites in their backgrounds, and you can't put the opinion of any of us into one pot. The University is a microcosm of a greater society."

The committee agreed to address the issues of both housing integration and the situation of the American Indians on campus in their report.

"I support his decision completely," Friday said. "That's his responsibility, and I certainly support him."

Student reaction to the decision was mixed. "If it weren't during exams, it seems like it would be a lot of fun for everyone to get involved in," Ashley Tate, a freshman business administration major from Charlotte, said. "I can see why he (Fordham) opposed it because it would cause some disruption in the school."

David Creech, a senior RTVMP major from Hendersonville, viewed the decision in a different perspective.

"I wouldn't say his decision is wrong," he said. "I don't think that the assumption that the filming would be disruptive is right. The film isn't going to get in students' way. I think that it will increase excitement within the University."

Filming has taken place on campus before. Corporations such as PepsiCo Inc. have shot commercials on campus, Tillman said. However, the filming was generally done after class hours and as unobtrusively as possible, Tillman said.

Both Tillman and Bonus said that the University's refusal should not negatively affect North Carolina filmmaking.

"I don't think this will affect filmmaking in North Carolina," Tillman said. "We still have the weather and the scenery. We have the mountains and the beaches, and I don't think this decision will hurt the North Carolina film industry one single bit."

scores on ability tests showed that children in the day-care program had higher marks on verbal and perceptual-performance testing according to a center news brief.

Another indirect change noted in the Abecedarian Research Project was that mothers of the high-risk children in the program generally moved into a higher-skilled job than mothers whose children were not in the program.

The teachers and staff at the FPG Center are well-trained and most have been there more than five years, Mansfield said. "But more than this, we all have a concern and an ability to work and understand children."

But the center is not all work and no play; it offers a toy-lending library where children can check out toys and games. This, Mansfield said, is to help parent-child interaction at home.

Congratulations. You've just become a better photographer.

No need to change your equipment or your technique... just try the new family of Kodacolor VR films.

Advances in color print film technology can help you get the best color pictures ever from Kodak films. Try all four new films in your 35 mm camera...and be a better photographer!

Kodak redefines sharpness.

Kodacolor VR 100 film is the sharpest color negative film we've ever made.

Ideal for big blowups with top quality.

Great for close-ups, anything where detail is important.

Kodak redefines versatility. Kodacolor VR 200 film has all the sharpness, fine grain, and color saturation you got with Kodacolor II film—with twice the speed. Great all-around performer.

Kodak redefines fast action.

Kodacolor VR 400 film has wide exposure latitude, plus color that's even more saturated on underexposures, and grain that's even finer than Kodacolor 400 film.

Ideal for stopping sports action, even with long telephoto lenses.

Kodak redefines low light.

Kodacolor VR 1000 film is the fastest color print film in the world, for good pictures in low light, and when you need very high shutter speeds to stop action. An advanced, new emulsion technology enables the film to capture more light without the grain and loss in sharpness you'd normally expect with such a fast film! Try all four new films...and see all the ways you can be a better photographer!
