

Pine Room to close for renovations

By CHRIS EDWARDS
Staff Writer

UNC students can expect to see some changes in University dining services during the upcoming exam period and during the spring semester.

At a meeting of the Food Services Advisory Committee Friday, ARA Director of Dining Services Tony Hardee said the Pine Room would close for the semester at 7 p.m. Friday, Dec. 9, because of ongoing renovations in Lenoir Hall.

From then until the end of the semester the Fast Break will offer a cafeteria-style serving line featuring meats and vegetables seven days a week. The Pine Room will reopen at the beginning of the spring semester.

According to Hardee, additional tables will be put in the Fast Break and possibly in the Union to limit problems with overcrowding. "I urge students to come earlier or later than they normally eat to miss the peak periods," Hardee said.

Hardee said the exam period was traditionally a time of reduced traffic in university dining establishments, and he said he knew more students would avoid eating in the Fast Break during this exam period because of the crowds. "I realize the Fast Break could be crowded during this time, so I have extended the time through which current meal plans can be used until Feb. 3 next semester," Hardee said.

A serving line will be set up along one wall of the Fast Break to provide hot meals. "It will be a full cafeteria line with less variety than the Pine Room," Hardee said. "I realize that a choice between only hot dogs and hamburgers is not acceptable."

The Fast Break will continue to serve its full menu of fast food, and the South Campus snack bars in Morrison and Hinton James will operate during their regular hours.

Food Services Committee Chairman Ron Hyatt said the early closing of the Pine Room was unavoidable.

"I want students to know that the reason we are closing is to improve food services over time," Hyatt said. "We will try our best to render good food services to students during exams."

Fliers describing the changes will be placed in dorms, statements will be mailed to students living in dorms, and an advertisement listing the new hours of operation will be placed in The Daily Tar Heel this week, Hardee said.

More changes are planned for the spring semester. According to Hardee, the Pine Room will close its doors for the semester March 30, 1984, in order to complete the renovations in Lenoir. Hardee said the kitchen in Lenoir would remain in operation during the renovations.

Through April 27, cafeteria-style meals will be served Monday through Friday in the Great Hall. The Fast Break will serve fast food seven days a week and cafeteria meals on weekends through April 27.

From April 27 to May 9, fast food and cafeteria meals will be offered at the Fast Break seven days a week because the Great Hall will be unavailable then.

As compensation to students for the changes during the spring, Hardee said a cheaper, $200 meal plan would be available. "We're not trying to force students to eat meals with us," he said.

"We simply have to make sacrifices now to be ready in August," Hardee said.

Officials say they're unaware of it
Decision expected on new film proposal

A decision is expected today from University officials on a revised proposal from Warner Bros. to film segments of Everybody's All-American on campus next spring — but University officials contacted Sunday said they knew of no such proposal.

"I have not seen any such proposal," said UNC President William C. Friday.

Public Information Director Thaddeus M. Bonus also said he was unaware of any new proposal. "Whatever changes they propose would have to be substantial," he said.

But Paula J. Wyrick, assistant director of the N.C. Film Office, insisted that a revised proposal had been made and a decision on it would be made public today.

"A representative from Warner Bros. talked with Rollie Tillman (vice chancellor of university relations) Wednesday," Wyrick said. "He explained in detail to Mr. Tillman exactly what (parts of campus) would be needed."

"I don't know if Mr. Tillman is not talking about it," she said.

Tillman could not be reached for comment Sunday.

Wyrick said the film would deposit $7 million to $8 million in revenues to the state. "It's quite a lot of money to be lost because the University won't allow filming on the campus," she said. Besides Kenan Stadium, filming would be done in the area between Phillips Hall and the Old Well, she said.

"Warner Bros. has changed a lot of what they felt like they shouldn't change. They're willing to change the shooting schedule, days needed, and even the name of the University," Wyrick said. The studio is willing to film any time between March and May, including spring break, as well as nights and Saturdays, she said.

Everybody's All-American would be Warner Bros.' first film made in North Carolina, Wyrick said. "They had about 60 locations in the story and we found all of them in about a 40-mile radius except the Nag's Head segment," she said.

"We (the film office) are state-supported, and the school is state supported. We're working on a happy medium for both groups involved," Wyrick said.

"It will really just be a shame if the school doesn't reconsider and say yes," she said.

Everybody's All-American, based on the Frank Deford novel of the same name, is the story of a fictitious UNC football great and his post-collegiate life. The film will be directed by Michael Apted who directed Coal Miner's Daughter and the forthcoming Gorky Park, and will star Tommy Lee Jones and Jessica Lange.

BSM

gospel music is a weighty factor in determining the Gospel Choir is of a religious nature," Rosen said. "I have not seen a book or article that has not called gospel music religious music."

But J. Lee Greene, an associate professor of English and an expert on Afro-American social history, said the court's ruling was consistent with the black church's view of gospel music. Greene was a key witness for the defense in the Nov. 16 hearing.

"Gospel music is seldom part of the religious ritual in a black church," Greene said in an interview Sunday. "They would allow it in about once a month, usually as an adjunct to the service."

"A gospel choir is never the main choir in a black church, except in the Pentecostal Church," he said.

The court ruled that a program, service or event is of a religious nature when its "primary character...looked at the entire context, including all surrounding circumstances...promotes or advocates a non-secular belief, or persuades or solicits the reasonable individual to a non-secular belief."

But a performance can be declared unconstitutional if it contains prayer or scripture or readings is held as part of a religious service, according to the ruling.

If a program, service or event is declared unconstitutional under the new "religious nature test," the Supreme Court is required to issue an injunction preventing the group from spending student fees. A group may have the injunction lifted by making "a good faith showing" that it will no longer violate the religious nature test. The Supreme Court injunction cannot last beyond the end of the fiscal year in which it is issued.

"However, we are convinced a good faith showing was made by the president of the Gospel Choir and that prayers will no longer be recited prior to future performances," the ruling states.

But Rosen said he wasn't aware of any good faith showing made by the choir. Under the guidelines established by the court, the choir's funding should be stopped, he said.

Kelly described the justices' deliberations as lively, but he said it quickly became apparent that the decision would be favorable to the Gospel Choir.

"We had an idea where the court stood," he said. "The opinion expresses that, which is reflected in the unanimous vote."

Frank Sandler, an associate justice, said he was skeptical of the choir's case going into the hearing but reversed his decision because of the evidence and testimony presented.

"No matter how we argued it, they deserved funding," Sandler said of the court's deliberations.
