The U.S. Office of Naval Research has presented a research contract of $755,000 to UNC marine sciences Associate Professor John Bane. Bane and a professor at the University of Rhode Island will study the dynamics of the Gulf Stream by observing ocean currents and conditions in the Atlantic Ocean 200-300 miles off Cape Hatteras, which is on the North Carolina coast. The two professors will be assisted by graduate students from the two universities. Bane said the primary significance of the project would be the additional information it would provide to scientists and oceanographers about the ocean system.

Results of a study conducted by UNC graduate students show that certain religious faiths received a great deal more coverage on the nation's three television networks in proportion to their membership than did several other faiths. The study, conducted by Radio, Television and Motion Pictures student James Gordon, showed that Roman Catholics, Jews, Episcopalians and Amish received more coverage than did Baptists, Methodists, Presbyterians and Lutherans, when the amount of coverage was compared to the membership of each religion. The study covered the broadcasts of ABC, CBS and NBC from 1972 to 1982. His source of information was the Vanderbilt Television News Index and Abstracts, which summarizes all evening news broadcasts by the three networks. Roman Catholics, who comprise 44 percent of the nation's church membership, had 56.4 percent of the network's coverage. Meanwhile, those four Protestant faiths, who total approximately one-third of that membership, received only 2.3 percent.

The North Carolina Area Health Education Centers have been given a federal grant totaling $135,000 to be used for special projects with goals of improving health care needs. The program is an alliance of the state's four academic medical centers and is based at the UNC School of Medicine. Its purpose is to provide a balanced dispersment of health care workers around the state through decentralized health education. This grant brings to $11.9 million the amount of federal funds the program, which is in its 12th year, has received. These funds will be directed for the growth of the program and the foundation of a statewide computer network to connect hospital libraries with the libraries at the four academic medical centers.

Knudsen urges voter awareness

Betty Ann Knudsen, candidate for N.C. Secretary of State, held a workshop on campaign organization Tuesday night at the UNC Young Democrats' meeting. Knudsen, who will challenge incumbent Thad Eure for the Democratic nomination, emphasized the importance of exercising the right to vote. She said statistics show that young people have one of the worst voting records of any age group. When people come to her complaining about an issue, Knudsen said she first asks them "Did you vote?" Non-voters "are part of the problem," she said "and I am not going to listen to them. Your vote is important." "We do not spend enough time encouraging absentee balloting. You need to make sure all your supporters know how to vote on an absentee ballot." Knudsen says she has no plans to make Eure's age an issue in the campaign, but it invariably comes up in her public appearances. Eure is 84 years old and has been Secretary of State since 1936. The issues she said she would focus on were updating official records and publications, moving the secretary of state's office from the old Capitol building to the Legislative Office Building in order to be near staff members, and transferring records from hard copy to microfilm. Hard copy then would be sent to the Division of Archives and History. Knudsen's campaign relies heavily on volunteers because of the high monetary priority placed on the 1984 Senate race between Sen. Jesse Helms and Gov. Jim Hunt, she said. Knudsen is currently the vice chairman of the Wake County Board of Commissioners. A resident of Raleigh she runs her campaign from her home. The secretary of state maintains records concerning state and local government actions and regulates North Carolina businesses.

CARP loses recognition after application discrepancy

By AMY BRANEN
Staff Writer

The Collegiate Association for the Research of Principles lost its University recognition this semester because their application for recognition listed as officers several persons who were not aware they were officers, according to Fred Schroeder, director of the Department of Student Life. "The fact that they were not aware of their capacity as officers was viewed as a misrepresentation of fact," he said. Schroeder said he did not know who submitted the incorrect names. The department first found out about the discrepancy when a student doing a research paper about the organization contacted the people listed as officers for CARP and found that several of them did not know of their positions. The student then gave the information to the Department of Student Life, Schroeder said. Schroeder said there were four names in question on the application. One, Dorothy Davidson, had agreed to serve as a temporary president for the group as a favor to her sister who is affiliated with the group at another school and until a permanent one was elected, Schroeder said. The other three did not know their names were involved she said. Schroeder said he did not think CARP Faculty Adviser Jerjang Chang knew the wrong names were used on the application. Davidson said Tuesday she had never been affiliated with the organization, even though she was listed in an October DTH as president. Because Davidson was listed as an officer on CARP's application for recognition, the Department of Student Life advised her to formally resign from the group, she said. Student Life told her she faced Honor Court charges if she did not resign, she said. Schroeder said the matter was taken to Student Attorney General Hunter Hoover to find out whether a violation had been committed against the code. "I suspect that what was said was that if she was the president of the organization she should resign from that post," he said. "I didn't sense there was any dishonorableness on her part." Schroeder said that if CARP were to apply again for University recognition, they would again be given consideration. Shirley Hunter, assistant dean of Student Life, said she talked with Davidson and did not tell her to resign. Hunter said that when Davidson informed her that she was not the president of CARP, she suggested that Davidson come by the Student Life office to settle the matter. Hunter said she spoke with an assistant to the Student Attorney General last week who did not know what the Attorney General had decided.

35 UNC students leave town for Toronto Exchange program

By ANDY HODGES
Staff Writer

About 35 UNC students left the cold North Carolina weather Wednesday to go to the even colder weather of Canada. The students, who are part of an exchange program with the University of Toronto, met at the Morehead Planetarium at 5:30 Wednesday afternoon to get ready for their 18-hour bus ride. The group was supposed to stop once in Niagara Falls, N.Y., according to junior Tim Sullivan, who is one of three student coordinators for the exchange. Christopher Armitage, an associate professor in the UNC English department and faculty advisor for the program, said the exchange between the two schools had been going on for at least 20 years. He said one of the trip's most important benefits was it gave students a "heightened cultural awareness" by allowing them to see Canada and how Canadians live. "It is a valuable experience about America's most important neighbors, who most Americans know surprisingly little about," said Armitage, who teaches a Canadian literature class. He added that the trip would also be a "dispeller of myths." "They'll get to see that Canada is not perpetually under snow and that it consists of more than just hockey players," he said. The exchange students from Toronto visited North Carolina in November. They stayed with UNC students, and their activities included a tour of the Environmental Protection Agency in the Research Triangle Park, a faculty reception, a lecture by political science professor David Garrow on Martin Luther King Jr. and the civil rights movement, a banquet at Mt. Zion Baptist Church in Chatham County, and a UNC-Clemson football game. "We showed them lots and lots of parties, too," said UNC senior Lynda White. The UNC students will stay with Toronto students during the week-long trip. They will attend a reception with the neutenant governor of Toronto, hear lectures by professors at the University of Toronto, go cross-country skiing and ice skating and visit the Canadian National Tower, one of the world's largest structures. The students, who were selected by an application and interview process, will miss four or five days of classes before returning to Chapel Hill next Wednesday, but that should not be much of a problem for either the students or their professors, Sullivan said. "Since it's a University-recognized and sponsored program, almost all professors are supportive of it," Sullivan said. "We've encouraged students who are going to get as much of their work out of the way as possible before they go and then work with their professors when they get back." The biggest problem, said Sullivan, who also went on the exchange last year, may be the cold. He said he had heard stories of people's skin freezing when they stayed outside in the cold and wind for too long. "It'll make the rest of the winter in North Carolina seem like the tropics," he said.

APO collects fewer books but makes more money as it helps students

By JANET OLSON
Staff Writer

The Alpha Phi Omega book co-op helped about 2,000 students save money this semester, according to Maryann Duffy, APO president. Although APO collected about 2,500 fewer books than it did last spring, the book co-op earned over $7,000 more in total sales. Sales rose, Duffy said, because students successfully sold their books at higher prices. Duffy said the total number of books collected decreased because more new editions are being used this spring than in recent semesters. "A lot of people check to see if the book's going to be used next semester before they bring it over here," Duffy said. The co-op loses inventory when students sell their books back to Student Stores during exam week, Duffy added. Because APO collects used books at the beginning of the semester, students who want to sell books before Christmas cannot use the co-op. Those students who do use APO's book service receive from APO 85 percent of the price the book sells for at the co-op. The student selling the book sets his own price. "We advise students to go to Student Stores, see what they're selling the book for, and to underprice the books," Duffy said. APO keeps 15 percent of the total book sales each semester. After subtracting the $250 to $300 spent to run the co-op, APO donates the remaining profits annually to a University Scholarship Fund which the fraternity set up in its name. Duffy said she estimated that APO will donate $12,500 to $13,000 to the fund this year. Today is the last day students can receive cash from APO for books sold at the co-op. Students can receive a check for money owed to them until Feb. 6 by going to the APO complex with their receipts. APO will claim all books remaining at the complex after Feb. 6 as APO property, Duffy said, whereupon the fraternity will attempt to sell the books to a bookbuyer.

DO YOU WANT TO FLY?

Face it you've always wanted to fly! Many of us have had the feeling and for some it has never gone away. If you have that feeling, then you're in luck. Air Force ROTC Flight Instruction Program (FIP) is available to you. It's designed to teach you the basics of flight through flying lessons in small aircraft at a civilian operated flying school. The program is an EXTRA for cadets who can qualify to become Air Force pilots through Air Force ROTC. Taken during the senior year in college, FIP is the first step for the cadet who is going on to Air Force jet pilot training after graduation.

This is all reserved for the cadet who wants to get his life off the ground with Air Force silver pilot wings. Check it out today.
