UNC stops Ga. Tech Price helps turn things around

By FRANK KENNEDY
Assistant Sports Editor

Mark Price had a challenge facing him head on.

The sophomore guard's Georgia Tech Yellow Jackets were hanging tough against No. 1 North Carolina Saturday, trailing only 48-45. But then John Salley, Tech's intimidating power forward, fouled out of the game while trying to stop UNC's Michael Jordan on a fast-break layup with 7:28 to play.

Salley's departure all but eliminated the Jackets' inside threat, as center Yvon Joseph had left just minutes earlier.

Jordan swished both ensuing free throws, giving the Tar Heels a five-point edge. Price knew the only hope was to make that outside bomber he has become known for. So, when the Jackets brought the ball upcourt, Price rifled a 25-footer that rimmed the basket. The Tar Heels rebounded, and Tech never got closer than five points again and fell to UNC, 73-61.

For Price, there was only mild disappointment with this defeat; there was no bitterness from the 6-foot guard who has all but turned around Tech's fortunes. After all, he remembers when the Yellow Jackets were soundly beaten week in and week out by everyone and his brother. So how could he be terribly upset with only Tech's third loss in 17 games?

"We showed a lot of people that Georgia Tech is a team to be reckoned with," Price said. "We had a chance to win. If our big men hadn't have gotten in foul trouble, we would have taken it right down to the wire."

Price, who scored 14 points on six-of-17 shooting from the field and dished out six assists, said he figured his team had already gotten over the biggest challenge: earning a little respect.

"We don't come into games trying to prove anything," he said. "We just let people decide for themselves."

Tech applied a tough man-to-man pressure defense that, according to Price, forced a number of missed UNC shots. On numerous occasions, UNC penetrated but could not get the shots to fall. Despite a 39-23 rebounding edge, the Tar Heels never had the game locked up until the final two minutes.

"They had to play us straight up (on defense)," Price said of the Tar Heels. "Nobody can zone us because we have such a strong outside game."

In fact, the Tar Heels could easily have lost.

Forward Sam Perkins, who suffered a mild thigh bruise in practice earlier in the week, was advised not to play Saturday. However, the senior All-American insisted on playing and scored 16 points and 12 rebounds. Had Perkins been absent, coach Dean Smith's game plan to get the ball inside might have failed.

Tech's Joseph picked up three personal fouls in the first six minutes of the game and was not a threat. "That was more of a factor defensively than offensively because we couldn't match up with Perkins and Daugherty inside," Price said.

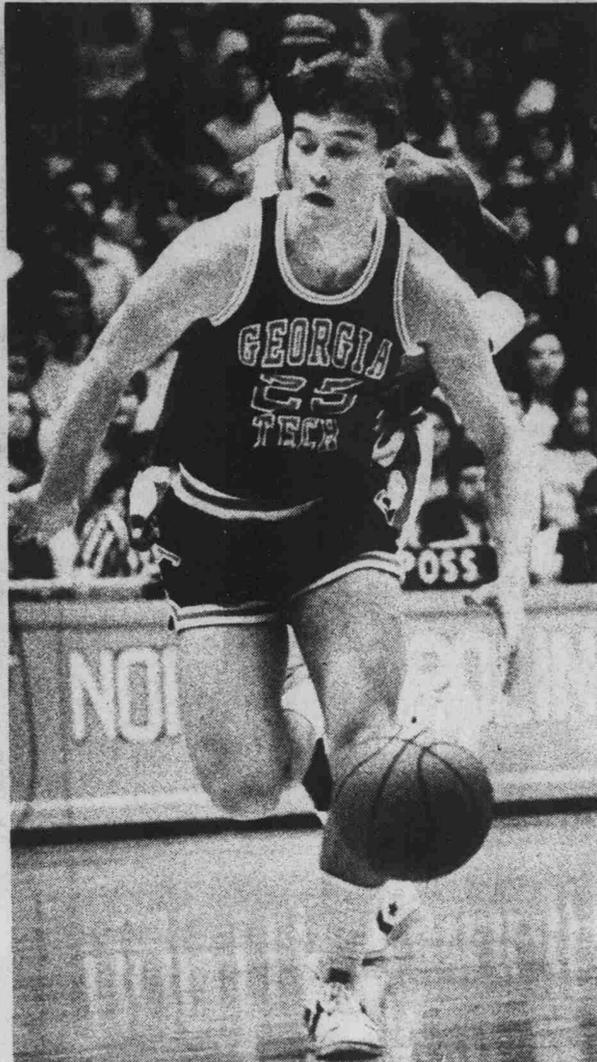

The Tar Heels frustrated Tech by converting on 17 of 21 free throws in the final 7:28, including several one-and-one situations.

"Right now, we're real positive," Price said after the loss. "We've beaten everyone in the ACC except Carolina, and we get another shot at them. There's no greater challenge than being in college basketball at Georgia Tech. We're learning more every game, and we're getting better every time. I hope we'll be a national contender, hopefully before I get out of here."

Tech coach Bobby Cremins knows how close his team is to that status. "We're still a year or two away," he said. "We need one more good recruiting class."

At 4-2 in the ACC, Tech is one of only three teams with a winning record in conference play and stands a good chance of going to the NCAA tournament.

"We have confidence that we can play with anybody," Price said. "I feel good because I know I've had something to do with the turnaround."

Mark Price has had a lot to do with Georgia Tech's rise in the ACC.

Daugherty to face charges this week

The Associated Press

North Carolina basketball player Brad Daugherty has been ordered to appear in court Feb. 2 on charges of attempting to injure personal property and disorderly conduct.

Daugherty, a sophomore center, was charged Jan. 14 when an Apex man identified him as one of three men who threw something at his car. Chapel Hill police said the object thrown was candy.

Douglas Wayne Goodwin of Apex told Chapel Hill police he and his wife were sitting in their car near Granville Towers, where the UNC basketball players live, when three men approached his car.

Goodwin told police the three men threatened him when he objected to their throwing the candy at his car.

"It was the first time our defense didn't carry us," Dean Smith said. "But of course, in the second half Jordan put on a show and Perkins was all over the place."

Jordan put on a show and Perkins was all over the place enough to counter a North Carolina man-to-man defense that was unable to contain Reynolds, and a variety of zones that didn't fare much better.

The Tigers inched a 37-34 halftime advantage to six points with 13:28 to play on Leonard Mitchell's 18-foot jump shot before the Tar Heels tightened up on defense and Jordan took control. Less than 9 minutes and 17 Jordan points later, North Carolina was up by 7 and "the incident" was just seconds away.

"I just wanted to create something because we weren't penetrating and the fast break wasn't producing anything," Jordan said of his scoring outburst. "I was going to the offensive boards, penetrating."

In the eyes of Dale Brown, Jordan played a part in the creation of a minor controversy over the events that interrupted Kenny Smith's season. The LSU coach thought Jordan should have been ejected from the game for pushing Tudor to the floor. But he added that the referees' failure to do so had no effect on the game's outcome.

"That had nothing to do with it," Brown said. "The turning point was we weren't patient in the second half, whereas we were in the first half. We questioned we could win. That was the difference."

and this year we solicited every department and every department chairman."

"I think two or three evaluations still got switched this year, Crowder said, "but that's good out of 300."

The committee is also working hard to change students' attitudes about filling out the questionnaires.

"I think students' attitudes would be better if the evaluations were given out farther in advance and if the professors stressed how important it was," said Crowder.

Attitudes also could be improved if the course review were broadened to include a lot more elective-type courses, Crowder said. Many people take electives in the English department, and that is one area that isn't covered extensively, she said.

All of the departments that participate in the CCR do so voluntarily, Salemi said. The committee canvasses the faculty for participants and then returns the reports to them after the evaluation results are tabulated.

"This is not just a way for students to avoid the weaker teachers," he said. "By asking students' opinions in an objective way, faculty get a peek at themselves as if they're looking in a mirror."
