

Reagan official campaigns for Cobey

By TOM CONLON
Staff Writer

Attacking big government and excessive spending, the director of the U.S. Office of Personnel Management defended Reagan administration policies and campaigned for 4th district Republican congressional candidate Bill Cobey on campus yesterday.

Cobey introduced Donald J. Devine and took time to speak and shake hands with students. He seeks to unseat six-term Democratic incumbent Ike Andrews in November.

"Much of the Congress in Washington — particularly the House of Representatives — are not concerned about the taxpayers' money," Devine told 20 students in the Union. "Much of the attitude in Washington is that the taxpayers will pay the expenses so, why worry about it?"

"One of the reasons we got into trouble during the 60s and 70s was that we had no capitol to invest in — we threw it all into government," he said.

"Today we have 100,000 fewer non-defense employees since Reagan took office — we're proud of that. My agency has 24 percent fewer people than before — and we're working more efficiently."

"We went in with the idea we'd approach government and do things differently — and hasn't the president done a fine job," he said, followed by applause. "We got unemployment down to 7 percent and it's going down. Inflation isn't even a problem any more. Eighty percent of the people listed inflation as the country's most important problem in 1980, and we'll be down to 4 percent — maybe less than that this year — the lowest since the 1950s."

"Now you know why they don't call it Reaganomics anymore" he said. "It worked."

Devine said the government must work more with the private sector in developing effective work practices for the federal civil service system. "Although the private sector differs from the public sector, we can learn much from them in terms of efficiency and budgetary practices," he said, and mentioned disability retirement.

"Twenty-five percent of our people were retiring with disabilities; the private sector is only 5 percent. We made them give adequate proof, and the results were a 58 percent cut in disability retirements and a savings of $4 billion."

"Government has to step back and allow the private sector to create jobs — it cannot take money away from them and take jobs with it," he said. "We've got to get people in Congress like Bill Cobey — who will let the private sector grow."

Devine, a former associate professor of government and politics at the University of Maryland, became head of civil service in March 1981. He was deputy director for political planning and analysis for the 1980 Reagan-Bush Committee and held responsibilities in the 1976 Reagan campaign. In 1978 he was the GOP nominee for comptroller of the state of Maryland.

During a question and answer period, Devine, in response about wasteful defense spending, said the Reagan administration has exposed such spending and that the Democrats have been using it as an issue against the Republicans. "You never heard about wasteful spending before we came into office," he said. "But that doesn't mean that wasteful spending wasn't there before."

Devine also said the administration hopes to abolish the automatic grade increases within the federal government's 15 promotional grades and replace it with a merit system. "It's a hopeless system when people know they'll be promoted just by sticking around a few years — we want people to know they've earned it."

Devine met informally with UNC public administration and political science graduate students at Hamilton Hall before the speech.

Hunt threatens Lake Gaston lawsuit

The Associated Press

RALEIGH — Gov. Jim Hunt vowed Thursday to proceed "full steam ahead" with a lawsuit against the proposed Lake Gaston pipeline after the Army Corp of Engineers refused to study the project's impact on the environment.

The corps said in a letter to several Virginia congressmen that it had denied a House committee recommendation to delay construction of the $172 million
