

King stresses on-campus, off-campus students working together

Kayce King, an international studies and economics major from Charlotte, has announced her candidacy for senior class treasurer.

King has worked for two summers as a bank teller at Republic Bank and Trust Co., in Charlotte so she has a lot of experience handling money, she said.

She said a treasurer also has a position of leadership because it is a class officer. "The treasurer should work with other class officers in bringing unity to the class," she said.

If elected, King said she would try to raise interest among the class about working on committees, and her job experience would help her. "Every job I've had, I've had to work with people," she said.

She said that since she lived off-campus she could see the need to involve students from both on-campus and off-campus in committees to govern the class. She would like to bring people who live off-campus together with those who live on-campus, she said.

"I really want to get involved in my class," she said. "I want to help off-campus people feel like they are a part of the class."

King said that if elected she would talk to people in the class so they could express their ideas through her.

She said she wanted to help organize activities, such as a coffeehouse with professors and students, and career-oriented functions to help seniors with their lives after graduation.

Most of a treasurer's duties do not come about until the latter part of the year when she would be involved in the financial aspect of the class gift, King said, so she sees the main duties of the treasurer as helping the other officers.

"I believe the major responsibility is just to give support to the officers," she said.

Besides her job as a teller, King has been assistant treasurer of Alpha Delta Pi sorority and vice president of a Junior Achievement corporation. She is the treasurer of her sorority now.

difference in substance," Minter said. "It can provide four more years for South Africa to delay reforms."

But there is a good chance that some significant action will be taken regarding U.S.-South African relations this year. Through public opinion and congressional pressure, bills in Congress can be passed to ban new investment in South Africa and export controls can be tightened, Minter said.

If the cost of continuing white minority rule is raised, the South African regime may decide the cost is too high and institute needed reform, he said.

In the question-and-answer period that followed, Davidow said there were necessary inconsistencies in government policies toward Grenada, Nicaragua and South Africa.

"Situations differ from country to country," Davidow said. "You can't compare Grenada and South Africa."

Peters wants to get seniors involved in Senior Class Committee

Dawn Peters, a political science major from High Point, has announced her candidacy for senior class secretary.

The office of secretary plays a mainly supportive role in helping the class president and vice-president communicate with the class members, Peters said, so the secretary would have to be able to work well with people.

"I feel I could work well with anyone who's elected," she said.

To help communication, she said she would hold office hours and also try "to reach out to seniors."

Peters said she would like to help get a cross section of the senior class on the Senior Class Committee. To do this she would organize a highly publicized campaign to interest seniors by advertising in The Daily Tar Heel and just generally making seniors aware of the opportunity.

"No experience needed, just enthusiasm" and a desire to help the class, she said, should be all the qualifications a senior needs to be on a committee.

If elected, she said she would also work as a class officer to get a speaker of national prominence for graduation.

"We have so many outstanding alumni we could bring back," she said.

Peters said she would try to organize special social occasions for seniors, such as dances or a senior night uptown, when seniors could get discounts.

"It's hard with 4,000 people, but even if you reach out and grab 400 people you've succeeded," she said. "I would like for every senior to attend at least one event so they feel like a part of the class," she said.
