'Phoenix' endorses Wallace; CGA backs Berger

By KATY FRIDL Staff Write

The Phoenix has endorsed Patricia Wallace for student body president and Mark Pavao for Carolina Athletic Association President.

The Carolina Gay Association also announced Tuesday that it will support Doug Berger for student body president and Arne Rickert and Dave Schmidt for co-editors of The Daily Tar Heel, said Robert Pharr, CGA co-chairman,

The Phoenix did not endorse a candidate for DTH editor. "For obvious reasons, we aren't endorsing any candidate for Daily Tar Heel editor," said Phoenix staffer and spokesman Chris Simmons.

"To do so would be similar to allowing the president of one corporation to come in and choose the president of your own corporation," Simmons said.

Rickert currently is editor of the Phoenix.

"We put a lot of time into the SBP endorsement, and we feel pretty confident about it," Simmons said. "We really had a tough time, because there are a lot of good candidates.'

After the Carolina Union forum Sunday night, the Phoenix selected five candidates they felt were most qualified. "We brought the five in for individual interviews," Simmons said, "and then we grilled them."

Dirk Marshall, Patricia Wallace and Doug Berger were the final three candidates the Phoenix debated over. Simmons said. "It was very difficult to choose one candidate from these three, because each has different strengths," he said.

"Wallace is a strong choice, she has a grasp of the issues, which, combined with her Campus Governing

Campus Elections

Council experience and her overall attitude toward the job, won her the Phoenix endorsement." Simmons said.

Berger is as well-qualified as the other candidates, Simmons said, but "we wondered if he (Berger) would involve the entire student body."

Simmons said the Phoenix did not consider the $100 mandatory meal plan to be of primary importance in this SBP race. Instead, the issue of Student Government involvement in off-campus politics was a much more decisive factor in choosing Wallace over Berger, Simmons said.

"That was the split," he said. "Is that '60s activism what students now want? We concluded that the student body is more concerned that Student Government run campus issues smoothly, and then address national and international issues," he said.

"We looked at the way people responded to that question -- that pertinent campus issues should be taken care of first - rather than someone who would put ideology first," Simmons said.

Candidates' stances on the constitutional funding of student organizations is another SBP election issue considered by the Phoenix in its endorsement of Wallace.

"We wanted to see who had a grasp on the issues," he said. "The big difference between Marshall and Wallace was that we thought she would hit the ground running

"We were very impressed with Marshall's intelligence and his logical utilization of resources when we confronted him with issues," he said. "But some had such a well-defined knowledge that it gave them an edge over the others."

Pharr said the CGA decided to support Berger because members believed he would carry through on his campaign positions. "Although it was a difficult decision to make, we feel that Doug is not only making promises like the others have, but has delivered already on promises," Pharr said.

"The CGA is encouraging its members to consider strongly that four of the candidates for SBP were not present at the forum and that Stuart Tonkinson, Daily Tar Heel editor candidate, was not present," Pharr said. Candidates Brad Ives, Max Lloyd, Reggie Holley and Dirk Marshall were not present.

The CGA endorsed Rickert and Schmidt as coeditors of the DTH, Pharr said, "because we believe that Schmidt has a great deal of experience, and that the experience Arne can bring from the Phoenix is invaluable.

"Also, the idea of having two editors is quite sound and will hopefully lead to more coverage of the CGA," Pharr said.

The Phoenix endorsed Pavao for CAA president because he seemed to have a solid grasp of the issues, Simmons said. The Phoenix did not endorse any candidate for Residence Hall Association President, Simmons said, "because we weren't able to become well-enough informed about the race due to time restrictions."

White Animals rock with tunes from Monkees to Marley

Davidson's condition improving

Junior varsity cheerleader Robin Davidson, who received a fractured skull in a fall during a stunt Jan. 15, has shown noticeable improvement in the past few days and has moved from critical to serious condition, a friend said Tuesday.

Tanya Beeren, a sophomore from Charlotte and a close friend of Davidson's, said the cheerleader, although still not fully conscious, was responding now to pain and was moving her face, hands, and feet.

"She seems to be hearing us talking," Beeren said. "We've been asking her to squeeze our hands, and she does.

"They've piped music into her

Beeren said. "We've even turned the (Carolina basketball) games on in her room," Bereen said.

"The doctor says he thinks she's finally going to start getting better," Beeren said. She said Davidson, a sophomore from Rocky Mount, had been taken off several drugs that regulated her cranial pressure and blood pressure and kept her from moving around while still unconscious. She also is being gradually taken off the respirator to which she has been connected because she has begun to draw breath on her own, Bereen said.

The White Animals get back to the basics of rock, but their sound also has a fresh, all-American appeal to audiences bored with often vapid top-40 fare. Whether performing a rowdy version of the Monkees' hit "I'm Not Your Steppin' Stone," their own polished ode "Constant Attention," or the cool reggae of Bob Marley's "Could You Be Loved," The White Animals crank out some of the most danceable songs since Elvis wailed in Memphis.

The group will perform at UNC tonight, sponsored by the Carolina Union social committee.

In 1979, Kevin Gray, the band's front man, traded a doctorate in psychology and a residency at Nashville's Vander-player Steve Boyd, and the rest, as they say, is history.

Boyd and Gray share lead vocal duties, but each band member contributes to the group's chemistry.

Lead guitarist Rich Parks' perpetual grin and clean-cut good looks have made him somewhat the heartthrob for younger fans. Drummer Ray Crabtree's percussion work is integrated into the band's overall sound. The fifth White Animal. Tim "Dreadmaster" Coats, is a laid-back master of ceremonies who engineers keyboards and synthesized percussion from his sound board.

Gray has described The White Animals' earliest days as the "I-know-fourchords-and-that's-more-than-youknow" style, but since the Animals' debut LP, Nashville Babylon, the group's sound has tightened and evolved stylistically.

The group's most recent LP, Ecstasy, contains all original material except for a nine-minute cover of Jim Morrison's "Gloria." The original material ranges from the band's anthem, "Ecstasy" by Gray, to Boyd's teen valentine "This Girl is Mine" and an African kalimba tune.

A new album has been in the works and should be in record stores soon.

Along with big concert dates, such as opening for Duran Duran, and videos, The White Animals still play their share of deb dances and onenighters, like many acts before them (The Police, R.E.M., etc.), until they happen to play the right place at the right time.

The White Animals know they could be loved too, so they wait patiently, taking one steppin'stone at a time, until they get the constant attention they deserve.

Meanwhile, the ranks of their fans swell.

The White Animals will perform at 9:30 tonight in Great Hall in the Student Union. Call 962-2285 for ticket information.

Wreck injures two students

A UNC student is hospitalized at Student Health Services with a broken leg following a motor scooter accident last weekend.

Kelly Powell, a sophomore from Wilmington, was leaving the parking lot of Piggly Wiggly grocery store in Carrboro when the Honda scooter she and companion Bryan Murray were riding was struck by a car entering the parking lot.

Murray, a junior from Kill Devil Hills, received only a chipped bone in his knee and a few minor abrasions, but Powell received a compound fracture in her lower leg. Doctors inserted pins in her leg and put it in traction.
