Campus Y volunteers breathe youth into nursing home

By MARY MULVIHILL
Staff Writer

A special interaction between Campus Y student volunteers and nursing home residents occurs each weekday at Carol Woods Retirement Center and Lakeview Nursing Home.

Twenty Nursing Home Committee volunteers individually visit the elderly in Carol Woods or Lakeview for two hours each week and gain valuable lessons about life from friendships with them.

"You learn so much about yourself," said senior Karen Culbreth from Charlotte. "You realize you could waste all your time sitting around watching television, rather than helping someone else."

Matt Smith, a senior from Cary, added, "You learn how to appreciate people."

The elderly benefit, also. "The students are able to give the residents some undivided, one-on-one attention that the nursing home staff often can't give them," said Marlene Kort, Carol Woods activity director.

Culbreth said she told the residents about classes, boyfriends and news.

"I try to ask the residents what day and what month it is, because it's easy for them to lose track with the outside world," said Carolyn Hill, a senior from Denton and committee co-chairman.

According to Susan French, Lakeview activity director, "They like to hear about what the younger people do and what is going on in the outside world."

Kathy Kolackovsky, a freshman from Harrisburg, Pa., said she first talked with the people in the Lakeview lobby and then went into the rooms to talk with the less sociable residents. "Some residents recognize you and open up," she said.

But, said volunteer Emily Ayscue, a freshman from Charlotte: "It is kind of painful to see a change in the other way — people closing up. This is sometimes difficult to deal with."

Committee Co-chairman Larry Liss, a sophomore from Charlotte, said the activity directors helped them in these situations. Kort said she tried to enlighten volunteers about something in the resident's past that might explain his regressive behavior.

Committee members also encounter senile residents who talk with students, then do not recognize them or remember the conversation.

"It is not important that they remember you're there," Hill said. "We just smile and be there at that moment."

Kolackovsky said the residents smiled when telling the students their stories because the students were new faces.

Kort said, "Progress and changes are so small (with these residents) that any smile has to be considered a great reward."

The residents respond positively to special activities organized by the student volunteers.

"Students stimulate people to do things they normally would not do," said Denise R. Barnes, professor of psychology at UNC.

Seniors Jennifer Elston from New Orleans and Beverly Thorndyke from Lumberton conduct an arts and crafts class every Monday at Lakeview.

"Their favorite craft we've done is picture frames," Elston said. "We took pictures of each other to put in the frames."

Liss organized a men's club at Carol Woods because he said men were a minority there. The all-male club does activities such as woodworking, gardening and flying kites.

"It is nice for the men to have something, because they tend to be overlooked," Kort said. "There is a real bonding going on between men in the men's club."

Once a month, student volunteers at Carol Woods set up dining tables, distribute menus and dress as waiters for 50 health-care residents who cannot get to the dining room, Liss said. "We give them the treatment that the other residents have there."

Ayscue said the residents treated her as if she were serving them at a big party.

"It makes them so happy," she said. "That's really what we're here for, to help them have fun."

Residents from both nursing homes made valentines for children at the Dillon School this year. "It helped them have some sort of sense of being able to help someone else," Hill said.

This semester, student volunteers at Lakeview are helping the nursing home raise funds for the National Arthritis Foundation. In the Pit recently, they sold raffle tickets for a two-person hot-air balloon ride.

All these activities, Hill says, give committee members the great satisfaction that comes from helping someone simply by being there.

"It is great to hear them say, 'You've made my day by visiting me,'" Culbreth said.

Committee members also are rewarded when the residents start to expect and look forward to their weekly visits.

Rosalie J. Ackerman, professor of psychology at UNC, said she was concerned students became too important an influence on these residents who anticipated their visits. She said a study in a 1983 Gerontologist issue compared a control group of nursing home residents who had no student volunteer visits with an experimental group of student volunteers visited.

Ackerman said she encouraged inter-generational relationships but added that students needed to state any limitations of the time they would spend with the residents.

Elston agreed and said she had reminded the residents she would miss the Monday visit during Spring Break. "I also write letters every summer to be read to the residents."

In fact, most of the student volunteers don't plan to end their relationships with the residents. And some have decided to make a career of this interaction with the elderly. Elston said she hoped to be a nursing home administrator.

Liss, a psychology major, said he would concentrate in geriatrics.

"Being around these residents really made me think about their psychology," he said. "They really made me think and turn all the way around."

— for two years," Exum said. "To me, logically, if he had some legitimate counter-arguments, he would have had plenty of time to research these issues. In his actions, he is trying to filibuster this process."

Capel said Exum's claim was unreasonable. "The sole reason we put off the meeting last time was because there was no policy on hand. I don't feel I should have gone to find a copy."

Under the terms of last year's agreement, the policy was to be re-evaluated in February. But the Union Board was in transition after elections in February, Exum said, so the re-evaluation was delayed.

At Tuesday's meeting, Exum moved that the Board vote on the amendment and disregard Capel's suggestion, saying the issue had been delayed long enough. But his proposal failed to reach the required two-thirds majority. The issue will be discussed again at the next Board meeting on April 9.

The BSM had sole authority over the use of the Upendo lounge from 1974 until last year.

by Walt Weiss and Jim Stone.

In the seventh, however, Devy Bell beat out an infield single, Chris Lauria hit a one-out single, Mike Jedziniak came up with a squib for another infield hit, and Andrews hit a sacrifice fly to score Bell. That made it 3-1.

In the top of the next inning, North Carolina reverted to a "bunt offense." Stone led off with a bunt placed perfectly past Grossman for a hit. After a Weiss single, Surhoff laid a sacrifice bunt down the third-base line. Grossman fielded the ball, looked to third and errantly threw it into left field. Stone and Weiss scored on the play to tie the score, and Surhoff ended up at second.

After Bell moved Surhoff to third on a grounder, Johnson placed a beautiful suicide squeeze that Grossman couldn't shovel to the catcher in time, and UNC had bunted its way to a temporary 4-3 lead.
