Will an ump ever tell McEnroe to shut up?

By SCOTT FOWLER
Assistant Sports Editor

I have a dream. It is the U.S. Open finals, a fifth-set tiebreaker, John McEnroe is serving at match point.

His first serve rockets past his opponent, but is hesitantly called out. "You saw that ball out!!" McEnroe screams. "Do you have any eyes? I demand that this linesman be removed!"

In my dream, the chair umpire pauses, then deliberately turns toward John. "Mr. McEnroe," he says, "please shut the HELL UP!"

Why doesn't someone do this just once? The possible endorsements would far offset the fact that the ump would get fired. There would be numerous monetary possibilities (Atra razors, How to Win Friends and Influence People seminars, book rights, etc.)

To get back to reality — the U.S. Open seems to be tennis' last hurrah of the year before footballs start flying, but it isn't. Actually, the Open is only the third of the four major Grand Slam events on the tennis circuit, but have you ever seen the Australian Open, which is supposedly held in December or January, depending on what the schedule-makers feel like? Does it really exist? I don't think so.

This year's tournament has come up with some surprises, namely Jay Berger, a Clemson University sophomore who won the ACC championship at the No. 4 singles spot here in Chapel Hill last spring. Berger managed to qualify for the U.S. Open by virtue of a victory in a national junior tournament, and then roared through three straight rounds of the Open before getting beat by Yannick Noah in four sets. None of this would make you think Clemson stacked its lineup a little, would it?

Kevin Curren, the Wimbledon finalist who was blitzkrieged by Boris Becker, lost in the doubles quarterfinals Tuesday to complete a very disappointing Open for the native South African, as he also lost early in the singles draw. Curren was asked at a tennis exhibition in July what was between him and a major championship.

"I think I just don't have a very positive attitude," he said. "I don't have much confidence in myself." This from a man who has been in the Top 10 since 1982.

While some things change every year at the Open, they always seem to settle down into a familiar pattern by the last few days. Chris Evert continued one of the more remarkable strings in sports, reaching the semifinals in the Open for the 15th straight year. And Martina Navratilova, who was playing a quarterfinal match at presstime, should continue to roll toward another showdown with Evert-Lloyd.

"I wish Martina would take up another sport and Chris would have a baby," Andrea Temesvari, one of the pretenders to the throne, told me this summer. "They need to give some of the others of us a chance."

Duke coach Steve Sloan has some of the worst luck in recent memory with injured players. The Blue Devils had so many injuries last year that Sloan decided that he wouldn't allow his two key offensive players, quarterback Steve Slayden or tailback Julius Grantham, to be tackled.

But now Grantham has a stomach virus and Slayden has hurt his arm from, of all things, throwing the ball. Perhaps Sloan's next move will be to prohibit his players from eating and lifting their arms above waist-level.

Buzz Peterson, who marked up his parents' driveway with green paint to practice shooting when he was a kid, was cut by the Cleveland Cavaliers Tuesday. Peterson never did quite pan out after a fabulous high school career in which he beat out Michael Jordan to become the North Carolina player of the year, but few could take him in a one-on-one likeability contest. He'd make a good coach.

N.C. State will unveil its new, $500,000 scoreboard Saturday when the Wolfpack takes on East Carolina. Rumor has it that when State scores a touchdown the new scoreboard's hidden compartment opens and a circus cow comes out and does a pushup for every point the Wolfpack has scored.
