

Garner woman to challenge Cobey in '86

By CHARLES N. FERNANDEZ
Staff Writer

Charging that Republican Rep. Bill Cobey follows the wishes of the Congressional Club and not those of his constituents, Democratic N.C. Sen. Wilma Woodard will seek to challenge Cobey for his 4th Congressional seat.

Woodard, who lives in Garner, will officially announce her candidacy today at 5:30 p.m. at the Holiday Inn in Chapel Hill.

Woodard said Cobey did not support small business and voted the way Congressional Club leaders such as Sen. Jesse Helms vote.

"People should be part of government and not apart," she said. "I am a people-to-people politician." Woodard said that she knew her field well and that she would be a more effective legislator. She said her campaign would be based on promoting individual opportunity and a better economic life for the people in the 4th district.

She said her views would not change much from the ones she has carried during her eight-year political career. Five of those years were spent as a representative in the General Assembly and three as a state senator.

Woodard is on the Advisory Budget Commission, which helps the governor establish the state budget.

She also chairs the General Government Appropriations Committee, which limits the funding of certain government programs.

Other Democrats who have announced their candidacies are Duke University political science professor David Price, Chapel Hill lawyer Woody Webb and Kirsten Nyrop of Hillsborough.

Woodard said she had a good chance of winning the Democratic primary. She said she believed that the 4th district was vulnerable and that Democrats had an excellent chance of winning the seat.

"Beating Cobey is the main thing," she said. Woodard graduated from N.C. State with a history degree.

Nearly 50 firms recruiting through placement service

About 1,000 UNC seniors dropped resumes on the first drop-in day at the UNC Career Planning and Placement Office, Tuesday, according to the department's chairman.

The drop day was the first of five drop-in days to occur in 1985-86. About 50 businesses will participate in reading the material, and from it will select the students they wish to interview as potential employees.

The companies include banks, accounting firms, insurance agencies, manufacturers, retailers, and government agencies.

Any student who has fulfilled his graduation and major requirements but has missed a drop-in day still has a second chance. If space is still available, a student can go to his prospective employer's open session held Wednesday through Friday the week before the interview.

Marcia Harris of the UNC Office of Vocational Counseling urges all seniors to attend an orientation workshop in order to familiarize themselves with the job application process, the services available to them, and their use. A schedule of all such workshops is posted in 211 Hanes.

"The vocational office has a lot to offer and it's up to the student to take advantage of it," said T.J. Gilsenan, a senior from Winston-Salem.

Michelle Hill, a senior from Apex hasn't let all the recent activity surrounding resumes dampen her confidence.

"It's been really hectic, but the people that helped me with mine were nice and well organized, so I'm not worried," she said.

Broyhill not interested in senate; wants to continue in 10th district

By DEVI SEN
Staff Writer

U.S. Rep. James Broyhill, R-N.C., has decided against running for the U.S. Senate seat occupied by Sen. John East, R-N.C.

Broyhill, of Lenoir, said in a press release that although recent press reports had indicated his interest in a Senate seat, he was not running and never had been interested in doing so. "I am not, and I never was, planning a race," he said in a telephone interview. "The reporters played it up, and I'm tired of talking about it."

Broyhill also said in the release that he wanted to continue representing his constituency in the 10th district. He said he intended to run for re-election.

A public relations official in Washington, who asked to remain unidentified, said the 12-term congressman did not want to run because "it's the fact that he's got so much power up here now. He'd have to give it up if he changed seats."

Kevin Brown, Broyhill's administrative assistant, said: "He isn't going to run because he has no interest in a statewide campaign. He made this decision independently. It isn't based on what Senator East does or doesn't do."
