and "Support South African Freedom Fighters."

Bryan Hassel, a sophomore from Nashville, Tenn., said the UNC Board of Trustees considered the University a business and not an educational institution.

"The Board of Trustees supports monetarily a government so intolerant that it must use martial law to keep order," he said. "It's wrong. It's a double standard. It's not a business — it's a university. And it's our money that's being invested in South Africa."

Eric Walker, a junior from New Bern, showed students a copy of Friday's Raleigh News and Observer, which reported the deaths of four more blacks in South African riots.

"That's six in the last 24 hours," Walker said. "And 750 blacks have died since September 1984 rebelling against apartheid. Two-thirds of them were fired on by police, beaten to death or had dogs attacking them."

Walker said South African President P.W. Botha would do what he wanted, with no regard to blacks in his country.

"Botha said last Wednesday that he will not change any apartheid laws," Walker said. "Black Africans hold less than 13 percent of the area in South Africa. Botha doesn't care what anybody wants. I think that's where the U.S. government should think apartheid is wrong."

Walker told students to pressure city and state governments and the Reagan administration to condemn apartheid. Otherwise, he said, U.S. intervention in Central America and apartheid in South Africa would continue.

Allen Taylor, vice chairman of UNC's College Republicans, said he supported investments in South Africa because U.S. companies spend money on blacks and find them jobs.

"Black people in South Africa are supported by American companies," Taylor said. "Nearly $100 million was spent in the last four years on black South Africans. If you want to end apartheid, you don't want to divest. I'm not a racist. I want investment for more jobs for blacks."

Taylor was the only speaker who advocated investment. Several in the crowd became impatient, arguing with Taylor while attempting to cut short his comments.

University police asked the protesters to turn off the microphone at 1:10 p.m., 10 minutes after the scheduled conclusion of the rally.

UNC will be important. "The state looks to the University for leadership and the gathered strength of this place is now, and must continue to be, utilized to give direction and sound guidance to the growth and transition we are experiencing," Friday said.

He went on to say that although studies of institutions of higher education could be beneficial, they could be detrimental when used to gain control over educational freedom.

Freedom of inquiry, to speak truth as one finds it, to publish study results, and to discuss and debate ideas are fundamental to the existence of a great university, he said.

North Carolina played like mere mortals, sometimes even sloppy mortals. Wake took advantage of a partially blocked punt and some UNC substitutions to post two late touchdowns. But these were just useless appeals. The death sentence was final.

At the end of the game, most of the crowd hung around to give the Tar Heels a final ovation and to sing a chorus of "Amen!"

A near-perfect half of football seemed to be the answer to all Tar Heel prayers.

Many stories to tell in 34-14 UNC victory

By LEE ROBERTS
Sports Editor

There were stories all around the euphoric North Carolina locker room after its 34-14 wounding of Wake Forest Saturday at Kenan Stadium. Many stories could have been written, but the three stories that follow explain why North Carolina won the football game so easily:

Stonewall

The North Carolina defense ought to be called the Jacksons, because the legendary Civil War general by that name would have been proud of the way this group Stonewalled Saturday.

Three times Wake Forest had first-and-goal situations, and three times the Tar Heel defenders made dramatic goal-line stands.

The key to this stone wall was that these stones were rolling relentlessly at hapless Wake Forest offensive players all day. "Looking at the films (of last week's loss to Georgia Tech), we saw we weren't flying around to the ball enough," said defensive back Larry Griffin. "So that's what we did today."

Griffin did his part, breaking up three passes, intercepting another in the end zone, and doing out some big hits on those three stands.

Sophomore defensive back Derrick Donald broke up two passes, including one sure touchdown from Foy White to the talented James Brim in the first quarter. "You've got to fight, bite and scratch to keep them out of the end zone," Donald said. "The line, the linebackers, everyone did that today."

There was Norris Davis, with a beautiful open-field tackle on Topper Clemons to force a Deacon punt. There was the opportunistic Carl Carr, smothering a Wake fumble in the first quarter. There was Tim Goad, streaking through the line to sack a flustered White. There was Ron Burton, knocking down two White passes at the line of scrimmage. There was Brett Rudolph, who owned Michael Ramseur all day.

"We felt great," Rudolph said of the goal-line stands. "But more than us, the best thing that came out of it was that it fired up the offense."

Sure enough, in the second quarter after the first Stonewalling, the Tar Heel offense embarked on a 10-play, 99-yard drive.

And they had the Stonewall Jacksons to thank.

The Challenge

Before Saturday's game, offensive coordinator Randy Walker stood in front of the team and issued a challenge to quarterback Kevin Anthony.

"I want you," Walker said to his star pupil in front of all his teammates, "to play like Kevin Anthony can."

Anthony proceeded to go right out on the field and play better than that. In the first half, he broke the school record for touchdown passes in a game by tossing for five scores. At one point he completed 14 passes in a row.

Wide receivers Earl Winfield and Eric Streater had big days as a result of that challenge. Winfield caught seven passes for 95 yards and three touchdowns, while Streater chipped in with six catches for 96 yards and two other scores.

As with the defense, the whole North Carolina offense was clicking. The line, termed by tackle Harris Barton as "the best pass-blocking offensive line I've played on," kept the Deacons at bay all day.

The final Anthony numbers read like this: 23 for 31 passing for 279 yards and five touchdowns. A challenge met, and more.

Hunting Dog

Comparisons are inevitable, perhaps mandatory. Freshman tailback Derrick Fenner, in his first start in college, ran like former UNC back Ethan Horton by gaining 109 yards on 21 carries, wore Horton's familiar number 12, and stands 6-4, 218 pounds — exactly Horton's dimensions.

And to top it all off, Horton, now playing with the Kansas City Chiefs, has been Fenner's idol since Fenner was a sophomore in high school.

"It's a great compliment," Fenner said of the comparisons to his idol. "But I just run like Derrick Fenner runs."

That was more than anyone could have asked for in the light of injuries to both tailbacks William Humes and Brad Sullivan.

"I didn't feel like I'd have this good a day," a smiling Fenner said to a circle of reporters later. "It's a good start."

Fenner was far from perfect. In the second quarter he fumbled away a ball on the three-yard line, setting up the defense's first goal-line stand. On a fourth and goal from the one in the second half, Fenner couldn't get over for the score.

But overall his first college performance would have to be rated a large plus.

"This offense isn't easy to learn," Walker added. "To learn what Derrick's learned in just seven weeks is incredible. He has a combination of physical gifts and intensity. And he's getting better every day."

In hunting, many hunting dogs are bred and trained to hunt. Despite their training, some dogs can't seem to get the knack of hunting, while others seem to have a natural ability to do so. They just have it.

As Walker said of Fenner, "That dog can hunt."

roundup

North Carolina's next match will be Wednesday against N.C. Wesleyan in Rocky Mount.

The men, meanwhile, took it on the chin in another of their patented one-goal matches as they dropped a 1-0 decision to the No. 7 team in the nation, Connecticut. The Huskies improved their record to 11-0-3 on the year thanks to Kanto Lulaj, who scored the game's lone tally at 32:31 of the first half off a pass from Thouki Stavriandis. UNC's record falls to 7-6 with the loss.

Despite successfully holding in check Husky scoring machine Matt Addington and getting a good performance in the nets from goalie Darren Royer, the Tar Heels never put it together offensively and managed only 12 shots against the disciplined UConn defense. UNC faces another tough task today when it takes on Southern Connecticut State in beautiful New Haven. SCSU is the number one Division III team in the nation, and Tommy Nicholson and the rest of his chums will be hard-pressed to come out on top.

The field hockey team may have lost its No. 1 national ranking when it lost Saturday at Maryland, 2-1. The Terrapins, ranked 11th in the country, were paced by Heather Lewis' two unassisted first-half goals, while North Carolina's Judith Jonckheer scored the Tar Heels' lone goal 2:35 into the second half. North Carolina outshot the Terrapins 22-7, but when the final gun sounded, Maryland was the victor.

The Tar Heels rebounded Sunday by defeating seventh-ranked Ursinus in Philadelphia by the same score of 2-1. Louise Hines scored both goals for the Tar Heels as UNC outshot Ursinus 18-2. North Carolina is now 8-2 on the season.

North Carolina's women finished second and the men third Saturday in the Marquette Invitational cross country meet in Milwaukee, Wis.

The women's team was paced by Holly Murray, who finished second behind Iowa State's Bonnie Sons. Chrissy Nicholas (fifth) was the only other Tar Heel in the top five. In the team competition, UNC's 76 points gave them second place behind the 62 points of the Club Soda team.

George Nicholas was the top finisher for the men, finishing second to Marquette All-America Keith Hanson. Mike Currinder (10th) was the next UNC finisher. The teams from Colorado and Purdue tied for the team title with 43 points. North Carolina was next with 82.
