Royals win series

It was a royal flush Sunday night as Kansas City walloped St. Louis to win the 82nd World Series.

The Royals became the first team in history to recover from two opening losses at home to win the series.

The Royal were paced by George Brett who had four hits and by the pitching of series MVP Bret Saberhagen. Saberhagen allowed only one run in his 18 innings and two wins of series work.

Kansas City jumped out to an early lead in the second inning off St. Louis starter and loser, John Tudor. Steve Balboni walked and Darryl Motley blasted a home run deep into the left field bleachers.

The Royals increased their lead to 5-0 in the third inning on four walks and two singles. The key hit was a two-run single by Balboni. Tudor was replaced in the third inning by Bill

Campbell, who was to be the first of six Cardinal relief pitchers, none of whom could seem to stop the surging Kansas City offensive barrage.

The Royals turned the game into a blowout in the fifth inning when they sent 12 batters to the plate against five Cardinal pitchers. Kansas City scored six runs to make the score 11-0. That was the final tally.

The win culminated a comeback from a 3-1 series deficit, a feat which the Royals also accomplished in the American League Championship Series against the Toronto Blue Jays.

It was the Royals' first world championship in their 17-year history.

"I'm surprised it was such a blowout," Royals manager Dick Howser said in a champagne-filled locker room. "But you know baseball anything can happen."

Women win, men lose amid controversy in soccer

From staff reports

Second-ranked UNC, spurred by April Heinrichs' two second-half goals, broke out of a scoreless first half and ousted No. 4 Colorado College 3-0 Saturday in a match between two national women's soccer powers at Fetzer Field.

"I was very pleased with our play today," UNC coach Anson Dorrance said. "We used our combinations very effectively and moved well and that enabled us to take the lead in the second half."

Despite a scoreless first period, Dorrance said the Tar Heels made no real adjustments for the second period of play.

"I didn't try to make any real adjustments," Dorrance said. "I just told them to go out and keep playing hard, and that's what they did."

The Tar Heels' inspired play was reflected quickly on the scoreboard. Marcia McDermott took an assist from Heinrichs and booted the first goal of the match at the 32:58 mark in the second period. Minutes afterward,

Heinrichs put the Tar Heels up 2-0 with her first goal of the match after taking a pass from freshman Tracey Bates.

With an assist from Nancy Slocum, Heinrichs added an insurance goal with 17:45 left to play.

The UNC men's soccer team lost to N.C. State 2-1 Saturday in Raleigh as a game-tying goal by the Tar Heels was disallowed with 30 seconds left when UNC was called for fouling Wolfpack goalie Kris Peat.

The Wolfpack, ranked 10th in the nation, improved to 11-2-2 (2-1-1 in the ACC) while the Tar Heels fell to 10-8 and 1-3.

The Tar Heels opened the scoring 31 minutes into the first half when Dave Smyth headed in a pass from Donald Cogsville. The Wolfpack evened the game early in the second half when Jeff Guinn scored on an unassisted goal. State took the lead at the 71:00 minute mark of the match on a goal by Sadri Gjonbalaj from 10 yards out. The goal followed a near miss by Guinn, whose shot hit the crossbar.

Lebo shines, Smith slams in UNC Blue-White game

By JAMES SUROWIECKI

Carmichael Auditorium was jammed Saturday afternoon, and it wasn't because of the volleyball game. No, the 10,000 fans who crowded into Carmichael following the Florida State debacle were looking for basketball UNC style, and they got it in the form of the first Blue-White game of the season.

And even if it was just an intra-squad scrimmage, for the packed throng the game was a welcome portent of the season ahead and a potent reminder of the years past.

If for the fans the game was a chance to check out the old guard and the four freshmen, for the players it was a chance to have some fun and work on their games in front in a game environment. "We haven't got exactly set yet," Warren Martin said later. "We were trying to do everything, but we're still a little tentative. (The game's) just like a big practice."

Practice or not, it was still a game, and there was a final score. The Blue team, which started a lineup of Joe Wolf, Curtis Hunter, Warren Martin, Jeff Lebo and Steve Hale, knocked off the White squad 85-70 thanks mainly to the terrific performance of the fast-breaking trio of Hunter, Lebo and Hale, as well as 21 points from Wolf.

The White starters included Steve Bucknall, Dave Popson, Brad Daugherty, Ranzino Smith and Kenny Smith with Kevin Madden off the bench.

The game itself was interesting, in a predictable sort of way. Considering the Tar Heels have been practicing for less than two weeks, the caliber of play was higher than might have been expected, and time and again players gave up shots to pass the ball off to an open teammate. The result of this characteristic quest for a better shot was a shooting percentage of 59 percent for the Blue team. (All right, so the White team only shot 44 percent from the field. The shots were there, they just weren't falling.)

Later, Hale spoke of the unselfishness which is so crucial to UNC's offense. "We're not out for ourselves," he said. "If we don't play unselfishly, we won't play. If we had two All-Americans on the team, we could play a little more one-on-one, but we don't. We've got to play five people."

There were a few things which stood out about the game. The first was the revitalized Tar Heel fast break, which looked particularly impressive during the first half. Aside from Kenny Smith's familiar steals and slams, of which he had three, the blue-clad trio of Lebo, Hunter and Hale ran the White team into the ground as they built an insurmountable first-half lead.

Nearly midway through the half, with the Blue team up 21-14, the threesome went to work and in the space of two minutes reeled off 10 points. First, Hale and Hunter nailed baseline jumpers off passes from Lebo, and then the Pennsylvania Prodigy put in a layup off of a 3-on-1 break.

Not done yet, Hale scored and then, after Wolf rejected Madden, Lebo pump-faked Bucknall up, was fouled by Madden and still managed to put one in off the glass. For all intents and purposes the game was over right then.

UNC coach Dean Smith was pleased with the way the Tar Heels ran the ball up the court. "This is the earliest we'd played a Blue-White game, but our fast break is there," he said. "We were basically unselfish on offense."

Another eye-catcher among the turnovers and missed shots was the performance of Kenny Smith, who scored 25 points in a losing cause on the strength of 12-for-20 shooting. "The Jet" was flying as usual Saturday, and more importantly, he looks ready to assume a more important scoring role on the team. One thing to look at was Smith's outside shooting, as 14 of his 25 points were the result of jumpers.

Okay, everything else is out of the way. Let's talk about the real reason everyone came to the game: the freshmen. No question but that the four rookies responded well to the pressure of their first game in Carmichael. Hensley finished with six points, and demonstrated a nice touch on offense, although he needs to put on about 30 pounds. Madden also had six points, but he was just two-of-eight from the field and struggled at times.

Bucknall only chipped in four points, but played extremely well and finished with nine assists, including one magnificent behind-the-back pass to Kenny Smith which resulted in a dunk. "Steve's one of the best passers on the team," Smith said. "I was expecting the pass." For a 6-6 small forward, Bucknall showed an atypical court awareness and hands capable of passes that were reminiscent of Magic Johnson's.

But the star of the game, the man who made the crowd come alive and who looked more like a young Jerry West than anything else, was Lebo. Lebo was all over the court, breaking out on the wing and then pulling up for a 13-footer, skying for a rebound and sending a quick outlet to Hunter, running the offense from the point.

After his first shot, which found nothing but air, everything he put up seemed to find only net. He finished with 23 points, six rebounds, four assists and two steals, while turning the ball over only twice. He shot eight-of-10 from the field and seven-of-nine from the line. Generally superb.

"He's a good player, no doubt," Kenny Smith said. "He can make the smart play and he made some tough shots. He didn't play like a freshman."

None of the freshmen looked like they were affected much by the crowd or the Carmichael mystique. Dean Smith praised them, saying, "They played as if they weren't scared. Lebo played with poise, Madden almost came up with some great plays and Bucknall made some nice passes. They're trying hard and they're unselfish."

Women get 1st golf win in 3 years

From staff reports

It took a long time, but it was worth the wait.

The North Carolina women's golf team broke a three-year winless drought in tournament play by coming from six strokes behind Sunday to win the three-day Lady Tar Heel Invitational held at Finley Golf Course.

The Lady Tar Heels outshot Miami of Florida, the tournament leaders after Saturday's rounds, 298 to 310 on Sunday. North Carolina finished the tournament with a 903 stroke total after carding a 302 Friday and a 303 Saturday. Kentucky finished second with a 908, and Miami of Florida finished a distant third with 909 in the 14-team field.

North Carolina's Michele Michanowicz, a Miami native, haunted her hometown school by shooting a 220 to take the individual honors. Freshman Donna Andrews of UNC tied Kate Rogerson of Kentucky for second with a 221, then won the second-place trophy in a two-hole playoff. North Carolina's Kandi Kessler finished tied for eighth with a 227. Seventy-five individual golfers competed for the 14 teams.

North Carolina's last tournament team win was the Duke Spring Invitational in Durham in April of 1982.
