institution of the United States government," he said, drawing applause.

When asked to explain the high number of civilian casualties inflicted by the contras during their attacks on non-military bases, Calero denied that his organization attacked unarmed civilians.

"I do not know of any high number of civilian casualties," he said, causing a commotion in the audience. "There have been civilians killed, just as there have been civilians killed in all wars... but most of them have been killed because the Sandinistas forced them into their military vehicles."

He said the contras would soon publicize the changes they would make for the Nicaraguan government if they are able to assume power.

"We believe in private enterprise," he said. "We believe in economic freedom because political and economic freedom go together. We believe in social reform."

He said the contra government would invite foreign investment into Nicaragua to generate the capital and savings it needs to stabilize its economy.

Allen Taylor, vice chairman of the UNC College Republicans, told reporters before the speech that his organization had invited Calero to speak to educate the public about a side of the issue that is often not publicized.

"At least both sides of the issue are being discussed," he said. "We want to let the people decide for themselves."

Ashley Osment, a member of the Carolina Committee on Central America, told reporters before the speech that her group did not want President Reagan to send aid to the contras.

Forum

Ryke Longest said the number-one problem of black students today was apartheid. As SBP, he said, he would do what he could to make that concern known to University administrators.

"It's the concern of all students to make a stand on apartheid," he said. "It's the concern of the student body president to voice that concern and make it known."

Longest also said he would like to see the BCC a reality, with programming equivalent to the Student Union's. David Brady said a main concern of black students was minority admissions at UNC.

"In 1983, 10 percent of the population on campus was black," he said. "In 1986, minority population was 8.4 percent. That's a drop of 1.6 percent. We've got to get more on this campus."

In addition, he said, having more black students on North Campus would help the whole campus feel more comfortable.

Bryan Hassel said a BCC would be an important tool to increase cultural awareness. "It would also be an important recruiting tool," he said. "We need to get it set up now, see how it works and then get a bigger one later."

Hassel also advocated a strong guaranteed fund base for minority groups on campus and praised the BSM for its efforts for cultural improvement.

Gunfighting Tar Heels face UVa. in Cavs' Charlottesville corral

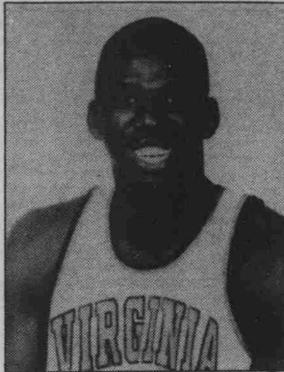

By JAMES SUROWIECKI
Staff Writer

Well, when you're No. 1, it's never easy. The old cliché about the gunfighter who can't escape his reputation is more true than most, and for the 21-0 UNC basketball team the metaphor seems particularly apt. For tonight the Tar Heels will be venturing into the Charlottesville Corral to take on the upstart Virginia Cavaliers, who have been outdrawn just once in the friendly confines of University Hall.

The Wahoos, 13-5 overall and 3-3 in the conference, should provide UNC with one of their stiffest tests of the season. Virginia is led by one of the ACC's rare true centers, Olden Polynice, who is averaging 15.9 points and 8.7 rebounds a game, and by sophomore guard Mel Kennedy, who has made a name for himself as a slick offensive player by scoring 11.3 points a game.

The Cavs have won eight of their last 10 games, including a 55-53 loss to N.C. State last Saturday which they could easily have won, and look as if they have begun the stretch drive for the NCAA Tournament.

As for UNC, this is just one of those games the Tar Heels have to win to keep their record perfect. After all, they already have an NCAA bid locked up and are coming off two big wins against Top 20 teams. On the surface, the game would appear to be no more than a gunfight the champion can't avoid. But there are signs that Virginia might be tougher than expected. To begin with, the game is on the road, where the Tar Heels have had problems all season long. UNC has not yet played a Top 20 team in its building, and when it has played quality opposition on the road, like Marquette and Maryland, the Tar Heels have struggled to win.

Another factor which Virginia can point to in hopes of an upset is the Cavaliers' aggressive style of play. Point guard Kenny Smith pointed to that when he said, "It's going to be a battle in Charlottesville. They're a tough, physical team."

Indeed, with Polynice and bangers Tom Sheehy and Andrew Kennedy

inside, Virginia is one of the best rebounding teams in the ACC, and should give UNC fits under the boards, just as Notre Dame did Sunday.

"We're looking for a good, tough game inside," Brad Daugherty said. "It's going to be physical." Of course, Daugherty wasn't exactly enamored of the way Notre Dame banged and pushed him around, so look for Virginia to pound the ball inside, especially since Daugherty had his poorest game of the year against the Fighting Irish.

Still, if UNC plays its customary controlled, well-disciplined game, the Tar Heels shouldn't have any problems with the Cavs. Kenny Smith is coming off a fine game against Notre Dame, where he had 20 points and eight assists, and Joe Wolf turned in terrific performances in both weekend games. Bolstering UNC's position as favorite is the fact that Virginia has blown big leads against both N.C. State and Georgia Tech. Given the Tar Heels' penchant for coming back, it looks like the Wahoos might be better off falling behind and then trying to rally. Maybe not.

The women's basketball team will also be in action today, as it hits the road to play Cheyney State. The Tar Heels, 14-5 overall and 5-2 in the conference, make their living off of guard Pam Leake, an All-America who is leading the league with 23.1 points and 5.7 assists a game, and carry a Top 20 ranking into the game.

Getting ACC tourney tix

Here's how you can try to get tickets for the ACC basketball tournament March 7-9 in Greensboro. UNC has 100 tickets available for students, and the cost to see all seven games is $90. Tickets will not be available on an individual-game basis for UNC students. You can sign up to be in a drawing to be able to purchase a ticket next Monday-Wednesday, Feb. 3-5. The signup will be conducted from 11 a.m. - 1 p.m. each of those days.

For medical and dental students, there will be an opportunity to sign up for the drawing Thursday, Feb. 6, in the Law School lobby and on the second floor of the Dental School in front of the student lounge. The signup will be held from 11 a.m. - 2 p.m.

The drawing to be able to purchase a ticket will be held at halftime of the UNC-Wake Forest basketball game Feb. 8. Four winning sheets of 25 names apiece will be drawn, as well as four alternate sheets.

Winners can purchase tickets Feb. 10 - Feb. 12th, Monday-Wednesday, at the ticket office from 8:30 a.m. - 4:30 p.m. You must bring your student ID, registration card and athletic pass to buy a ticket.

Remember family or friends with Special Occasion, Get Well or Memorial cards.
