

Women's golf takes title; Peterson wins in playoff

By B. A. VELLIQUETTE

DURHAM — Freshman golfer Katie Peterson eagled the final hole in the Duke Spring Invitational to force a playoff for individual honors, which she eventually won, to lead the Tar Heels to a team victory Sunday.

Trailing Wake Forest's Brenda Corrie by four strokes after the 17th hole, Peterson wasn't even thinking of winning the tournament. "I was just trying to finish well," she said, "but when she (Corrie) hit her shot off the green, I started thinking, 'maybe.'"

Peterson's second shot landed just four feet from the hole on the par-five hole, while Corrie's landed in the sand trap. Peterson sank her putt to finish three under par for the day. Corrie struggled to a double bogey, missing a short putt that would have given her the first-place trophy.

On the second hole of the sudden-death playoff, Peterson sank a birdie putt to win the tournament. "One of Katie's best characteristics is that she is able to keep her composure," said coach Dot Gunnells. "I think we're looking at the first of many wins for her. She's awfully strong for a freshman."

Peterson finished with a 71 for a total score of 214. Kelly Beck and Donna Andrews both shot one-under-par 73 to finish with a total of 228. Suzy McGuire shot a 77 to tie at 231 with Kandi Kessler, who shot a final day 80.

As a team, the Tar Heels finished two under par to win by four strokes in a field of 13 teams. The University of Alabama placed second, and Duke was third.

Kessler honored

UNC golfer Kandi Kessler was recently named to the Curtis Cup Team, which consists of the six top amateur players in country. The Curtis Cup Team plays biennially against teams from England and Ireland.

Reid sparkles in All-Star game

COLLEGE PARK, Md. — J.R. Reid stole the show Saturday night in the 13th annual McDonald's Capital Classic all-star basketball game here.

Reid, the national high school player of the year who has committed to attend UNC in the fall, scored 29 points and pulled down 17 rebounds in his Capital all-star team's 127-118 loss to the U.S. squad. His 29 points tied the scoring record for the Cap Classic with another relatively well-known player — former Louisville All-America Darrell Griffith.

Reid said afterwards that he was feeling better about his life in general since his commitment. "I really haven't had any coaches calling me trying to get me to change my mind," Reid said. "Lately, I've just trying to work in school and get mentally ready for Carolina."

Reid said he would like to attend summer school at UNC. However, he said UNC coach Dean Smith is encouraging him to play with some U.S. Junior National teams overseas.

Clemson whitewashes Tar Heel tennis, 9-0

By SCOTT FOWLER
Sports Editor

Contrary to popular belief, there are really only seven tennis teams competing in the Atlantic Coast Conference. One other team plays on an entirely different level, so much so that in regard to tennis 'ACC' might as well stand for All Clemson Conference.

The Tigers, currently ranked fourth in the country, have won an incredible 52 of 53 dual matches against ACC opponents in a streak stretching back to 1979. They certainly did nothing to blemish that mark Sunday, totally outplaying North Carolina and handing the Tar Heels their worst loss of the season, 9-0, at the UNC Tennis Center.

The domination was close to complete, with the Tigers losing only two sets out of 20 in the entire match. Mark DeMattheis was able to take the first set 6-3 off Clemson's Brian Page — who is ranked 21st in the country but plays No. 3 for the Tigers — but succumbed 6-4, 6-0 in the last two sets, although not without a fight.

DeMattheis, who can always be counted on for an entertaining match, had a break point early in the third set against Page and hit a scorching forehand that appeared to have caught the baseline. Page called it out to DeMattheis' disbelief. On the next point, DeMattheis sarcastically called Page's volley, which fell 20 feet inside the court, "Out!" Page won that game and proceeded to reel off the next five games to take Clemson's closest singles win.

"They are just an outstanding team," said UNC coach Allen Morris, whose team still finished with an above .500, 4-3 mark, for the ACC and has an 11-13 record, overall. "They are tournament-tough, and this year they have a realistic chance at winning the NCAAs."

That goal is what 25-5 Clemson has been pointing for all season, according to sophomore No. 1 player Jay Berger. "Ever since our first meeting this season we've talked about winning the NCAAs," said Berger, who after last year's freshman season went on to upset three consecutive pros and appear in the final 16 of the U.S. Open, where he lost to Yannick Noah in four sets. "We're a weird team. Everybody's a little eccentric. But we work hard, and I'll be extremely disappointed if we don't win the NCAAs."

Berger looked like a good bet at the NCAA individuals as well Sunday, as he lambasted UNC's No. 1 player, Jeff Chambers, 6-2, 6-0. Berger, who has been rumored to be turning pro after this season, was up 4-2 in the first set before running off eight consecutive games for a convincing win. "Jeff beat me 6-0, 6-0 when I was nine years old in a junior tournament," Berger said with a smile. "I guess I'm still trying to get revenge."

Chuck Kriese, the man behind Clemson's national success in recent years, said he didn't expect his star player to play nearly so well. But he has grown used to top-flight performances. "Seventeen of our 25 wins this season have been over top 20 teams," Kriese said. "We can win the NCAAs. We just have to make the chips fall our way."

The Tigers did that against UNC. Only one other match besides DeMattheis' was close, as Jimmy Weilbaecher, who has been playing well of late, extended Kent Kinnear to 6-4, 7-6 at No. 4 singles.

In the other singles, 9th-ranked nationally Richard Matuszewski walloped David Pollack at No. 2, 6-1, 6-3. Greg Boynton defeated UNC's Jon Coss 6-2, 6-2 at No. 5 and Vince Van Geldren beat Koley Keel 6-2, 6-0 at No. 6.

In doubles, Clemson swept all three matches in what has become a tradition for the Tigers, who have won the majority of doubles in 29 of 30 matches this season. Keel and Coss managed to take the first set off Kinnear and Geldren 7-5 before losing at No. 3 doubles 6-3, 6-3.

Despite the loss, Morris was happy with his team's conference play. "They've lost to a lot of teams this season, but they've never lost hope," he said. "We've been playing with three boys who have absolutely no experience at all at Nos. 4-6, and I think everyone has done a super job considering our schedule."

The Tar Heels will finish their regular season this week with a home match against West Virginia Wednesday and away matches against South Carolina and Furman Friday and Saturday. "I'm really not worried about those matches," Morris said. "I just want to get us on an up beat for the ACC tournament."
