

Festival, parade to promote peace

By SCOTT GREIG
Staff Writer

Downtown Franklin Street and the Forest Theater will be the scene of the second annual "People's Prophetic Parade and Festival for Peace, Justice and the Environment" on Saturday, April 12.

The parade, known locally as Apple Share, will follow the successful format of last year's event but is scheduled to include entertainment such as dancers, mimes and folk musicians as well.

Ed King, Apple Share spokesman, said everyone is invited to the festival, which last year brought together over 250 participants. King said he expects about 400 to 500 people this year.

"The main objective of Apple Share is to bring together the many activist organizations and individuals in the Triangle area in one large parade and festival," King said. "There is empowerment and mutual support in numbers and in unity which we can't always enjoy by acting alone."

All local groups dealing with any aspect of peace, justice or the environment are invited to join the parade. Simply being present, organizers say, is an affirmation of concern to make a way for peace, to encourage the establishment of justice and to share with the needy.

Those interested should gather at 9:30 a.m. at the Lincoln Center on South Merritt Mill Road. The parade itself will begin at 10:00 a.m. and will proceed down Franklin St. to the Forest Theater.

The outdoor theater will then be the site of the festival from noon until 3:00 p.m. At that time, balloons carrying messages of peace will be released.

A group of local school children will be performing a skit related to the parade's theme, and King said anyone who wanted to would be allowed to perform at the festival.

The benefit concert that followed last year's parade is not included in this year's festival, King said, because the emphasis is not on fund-raising.

King said while the parade and festival have roots in issues that are deserving of demonstration, the goal of the event is to be more prophetic than anything else.

"Rather than protest, we're stressing more imaginative and creative ways to illustrate how people feel about the country and the direction in which it's headed," King said. "The use of the arts is important."

King said he and several others on the Apple Share Planning Committee thought it would be worthwhile to bring all those people together and celebrate their creativity with the community.

Marion O'Malley, director of the N.C. Center for Peace Education, said, "This is not a fund-raiser, but a 'consciousness-raiser' and a 'community-wide support builder' for all issues of peace, justice, hunger and the environment."

King, who also directs Church World Service's CROP programs in the Carolinas, said the coming together of small groups into larger coalitions would make their efforts more effective.

"Not all the world's hungry live in Africa," King said. "One out of every seven North Carolinians goes to bed hungry several nights a month."

King said 40 percent of those people were too old, too young, too sick or too handicapped to hold down any job at all, much less a subsistence-paying one.

Other groups planning to join in include the UNC Anti-Apartheid Support Group and the Carolina Interfaith Task Force.

Low-cost hostel may come to area

By KAREN McMANIS
Staff Writer

The Washington, D.C.-based American Youth Hostel organization may soon establish a branch in the Triangle area, said Kathy Davis, a field representative for the organization.

The 1986 AYH Handbook describes hostels as "inexpensive, dormitory-style lodgings with separate bedroom and bathroom facilities for men and women, a kitchen and a common room for socializing."

North Carolina presently has five hostels, located in Bakersville, Blowing Rock, Dillsboro, Pembroke and Wesser. Davis said the system of hiking trails in North Carolina made the hostels appealing to those who enjoy outdoor activities such as camping, hiking and canoeing.

"AYH is presently very excited about establishing additional hostels in such areas as Raleigh and the Chapel Hill area," Davis said.

North Carolina does not have a council with the AYH, Davis said. The first of four meetings designed to establish a council for the area and to create several new hostels across the state was held in Asheville on April 7.

Davis is currently working on establishing an AYH council in the state. Brannen Ulrick, Manager for the Cooperative Trips Program in Washington, D.C., said there were 31 councils in the United States.

The councils are funded by donations from members and by the charge to overnight guests. A council can be established in any geographic area with enough volunteers and interest, Ulrick said.

"Because 95 percent of AYH positions are on a volunteer basis, interest and dedication on the part of our members is the most essential part of our program," he said.

AYH is a non-profit, non-political, non-sectarian organization working exclusively for the purpose of education through travel. This system presently includes more than 5,000 hostels in 62 nations with 275 across the United States.

To stay in a hostel, one must purchase a one-year pass which costs $20 for adults and $10 for juniors. The hostels range from $4 to $8 a night and guests are expected to share in the chores such as preparing meals.

"If you stay in a hotel room you know what to expect," Davis said. "You'll be boxed up with a TV and no alternative except to sleep too much. Youth hostels are a great place to meet people and have fun while traveling."

Gun law

control advocates.
First, he offered a package that included continuing the interstate sales ban on handguns and retaining state and local government control over interstate transportation of pistols. It lost 248-176.

Then he attempted to win the transportation provision standing alone. That effort failed 242-177.

The Volkmer bill would permit interstate sales of all firearms and create a right to transport them across state lines.

"I think it's all over," Volkmer said.

Hubert Williams, president of the Police Foundation, acknowledged that police groups "were quite surprised by the margin" by which the Hughes amendments were defeated. But he added: "We're not lawmakers or professional lobbyists. We're police officers."

Sarah Brady, wife of presidential press secretary James Brady and board member of Handgun Control Inc., said, "I thought it would be a little closer." Her husband was seriously wounded in the March 1981 attempt on President Reagan's life.

In Wednesday's debate, Hughes said, "The issue boils down to who we're going to support: the police or the NRA and their self-serving interest."

Rep. John D. Dingell, D-Mich., a member of the NRA national board, said the Volkmer bill "does not make it easier for criminals to get guns" but protects "law-abiding" citizens from burdensome regulations.

Rep. William M. Hendon, R-N.C., asked the House to uphold the Volkmer bill "for the good old boys in rural America who deserve reform of the Gun Control Act of 1968."

Rep. James A. Traficant Jr., D-Ohio, a former sheriff, said the Hughes language could "give a psychological edge back to our police officers."
