

U.S. theologian loses teaching post

From Associated Press reports

VATICAN CITY — The Vatican's decision to punish a dissident U.S. theologian reflects Pope John Paul II's desire to send a strong signal to the U.S. clergy on matters of doctrine and discipline before he visits the United States next year, according to Vatican officials.

After nearly 20 years of investigation by church and Vatican authorities into his liberal views on sexual matters, the Vatican has stripped the Rev. Charles E. Curran of his right to teach Roman Catholic theology.

The action, announced by the Vatican on Tuesday, meant almost certain dismissal of the 51-year-old theologian from the Catholic University of America in Washington, D.C., where he had been teaching moral theology.

Despite repeated warnings by the Vatican, Curran has endorsed artificial birth control and maintained that, under some circumstances, abortion, homosexual acts, masturbation, premarital sex, divorce, euthanasia and sterilization — all banned or condemned by the church — are justified.

A Vatican official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said the action should be seen as a warning to all U.S. theologians "who question any part of the church teaching."

"We now have a situation in the United States where many theologians teach not only the church doctrine, but also the dissident view," the official said. "Then these professors ask the students to pick their choice . . . an absolutely unacceptable practice."

Another official said some leading U.S. bishops had repeatedly urged the Vatican to take strong action against Curran "to make clear that Rome will not take any more nonsense."

John Paul, who visited New York, Pennsylvania, Washington, D.C., Iowa and Illinois in October 1979, plans another visit in September 1987.

Although the Vatican has not made any official announcement, the pope is expected to travel to Florida, California, Texas and possibly Arizona.

Curran became the first U.S. theologian to be punished by Pope John Paul. Since his 1978 election, the pontiff has cracked down on dissidents in an effort to tighten the clergy's doctrinal and disciplinary behavior.

In 1980, the Vatican lifted the Rev. Hans Kung's permission to teach Roman Catholic theology at the University of Tuebingen in West Germany. Kung had repeatedly questioned the doctrine of papal infallibility.

The Rev. Edward Schillebeeckx, a Belgian-born Dominican, was also called to the Vatican for an inquiry into his theological writings. He was reprimanded and agreed to modify some of his views.

The Rev. Leonardo Boff, a Brazilian Franciscan friar, was recently ordered to observe a year-long "penitential silence" for advocating Marxist-tinged liberation theology.

"I haven't met any freshmen in here," Hayes said. "I heard they were here, but it's very quiet." There are no freshmen residents on the first floor and only three on the second floor, Cannon said.

Although well-equipped, Carmichael dormitory is not completed. Some of the floors, which will eventually be carpeted, are bare. The study rooms have no lights or carrels. In the kitchens, stoves aren't functioning, microwaves haven't been installed and the washers and dryers haven't been connected.

"It's nice here because it's all new, but I just wish everything was done," freshman Mary Whaley of Connecticut.

"There are a few bugs in the air conditioner unit right now, but that's just because it's never been used," Cannon said. Carmichael has central air conditioning and several of the thermostats must be replaced, he said.

There is nothing unusual about encountering difficulties before completing a building, Hicks said. "We'll run into problems, and it may take about a year to get rid of the nickel and dime issues," he said.

Sylvester Taylor, assistant to the director of University housing, said a double room at Carmichael dormitory costs $713 per semester, and a single costs $1,011.

Another dormitory in high-price competition for students with Carmichael is Cobb dormitory. Hicks said the housing department recently spent about $85,000 installing window air conditioners. "Our ultimate goal is to have air conditioning all over campus," he said.

Cobb resident assistant Caron Ternullo said there are posters in the dormitory saying, "Cobb is the cool place to be."

Rent in Cobb dorm also increased to $713 because the housing department installed air conditioners, Taylor said.

The second most expensive dorms, such as Alderman, Kenan and Spencer, cost $666, he said.

boro, she said.

"We're lucky that we depend on the state," she said. Private institutions that depend on tuition to pay faculty salaries may have the real financial problems, she said.

The delays have affected both low- and middle-income students. It crosses economic and social boundaries, she said. Freshmen, upperclassmen, and graduate students are all waiting to hear, she said.

And more delays are forthcoming. The office won't process applications while distributing financial aid checks. That starts today, and will run for at least a week Morris said.

"After the first couple of weeks, students would be well advised to come over and check to see if we do need more information from them," she said.

"When there is limited money," Morris said, "our responsibility is to make sure that the people who get the money are eligible."

Checking up on financial aid applicants is necessary, she said, but "what has gone on this year is a little bit of overkill."

Camp counselors' job taxing, rewarding

By SUSAN WOOD
Staff Writer

They flock to a town with no movie theatre, shopping mall or even spotlight. Summer sends about 600 college students from campus to camp — summer sailing camp in Arapahoe, N.C.

Charlie Reagan, a sophomore at Auburn University in Auburn, Ala., was once a camper at Camp Sea Gull, which is located on the Neuse River in the small eastern North Carolina town. He has served as a counselor for the past two summers.

"It's a tradition," he said. "Where else can you get paid to go sailing? And you can't beat the spirit around this place."

Camps Don-Lee and Seafarer, just east and west of Camp Sea Gull, share the same sailing tradition and small town.

Some counselors are former campers while others learn of the job through churches and civic clubs. And when word is out that singing atop mess hall benches is a paid position, camp directors say student interest peaks.

There is no timeclock to punch, but counselors' schedules are tight. Reveille begins the day at 7:30 a.m., although counselors have been on duty all night.

Missy Wilfong, a sophomore at Meredith College in Raleigh, said that camp routines revolve around meals, activity periods and devotions. When campers rest, counselors take advantage of the break and also nod off, she added.

Counselors agree that the job is not all tans and partying. Paul Quinn, a UNC senior from New Bern, said that students need only to look out for number one while at school. "At camp you're no longer responsible for just yourself. You're in charge of 16 other lives."

When counselors become tired, the responsibility continues. "When you have been on duty for 3 or 4 days straight, it is really hard sometimes to keep your patience with the kids," said Linda Fisher, a senior at Broughton High School in Raleigh.

Songs at every meal and seemingly hyperactive kids can drain the best counselors. Scott Dean, a student at North Carolina State University said, "It is so hard to be 'up' every minute of the day, but you have to do it."

Summer camp counseling isn't for everyone. "During an interview I want to hear my prospective counselor say 'I Love Kids!'" said Camp Don-Lee Assistant Director Sharon Hawley.

Jim Epps, director of Camp Sea Gull, said that the job requires adjusting from an unstructured college lifestyle to a more disciplined camp atmosphere. "Not only do counselors have to enjoy being with children, but they must also lead lifestyles that represent the values the camp teaches."

Some counselors have computed that a first year counselor makes about seven cents an hour while working approximately 140 hours per week. But with little time off, no meal card payments or room rent, counselors said they managed to save some money for their return to college in the fall.

And some funds are for fun. Counselors pack on the Minnott ferryboat and head for Atlantic Beach, or escape fried chicken meals by traveling to Clancy O'Hara or T.A. Ross's Restaurants in New Bern.

Counselors kick back, drink beer and listen to James Taylor and Jimmy Buffet tunes at the Dockhouse in Beaufort. And for closer entertainment, the camps' leaders go to The Red Dog bar in Pamlico County.

But when it's back to Arapahoe, it's back to kids and campfires. Dean said he liked the job because of the opportunity to be a positive role model.

But nothing can explain the special feelings of a counselor, said Andy Evans, a student at the University of West Virginia. "There's nothing like seeing a young camper cry when their parents leave them and then see that same camper cry when its time to leave camp."
