

Football tickets to be distributed in SAC

By JILL SHAW
Staff Writer

Student ticket distribution policies for football and basketball seasons have been established in accordance with requests from the Faculty, Athletic Department, and the Carolina Athletic Association. Block seats for football games will be submitted at the ticket office of Smith Center between 8 a.m. and noon the Monday before each home game. Blocks will be available for representatives of groups of 20 to 100 who present all athletic passes at the office window. Block results are posted at 3 p.m. Monday at the Student Union and the ticket office. Block seat sign up for The Citadel will be Aug. 28 with pick up Sept.

2. Individual tickets will be randomly distributed upon presentation of Student ID, registration card, and athletic pass Wednesday through Friday, 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. A student can pick up as many as six tickets, but must present all other IDs, registration cards, and athletic passes.

One individual guest ticket ($15.50) or one season guest ticket ($38.75) can be purchased by each student. These tickets are available at the Smith Center beginning Aug. 25 (8 a.m. to 5 p.m., Monday through Friday).

Two guest tickets are allotted to each student for Parents Football Day at The Citadel game.

Random distribution of individual basketball tickets to students with IDs, registration cards, and athletic passes will occur at the will call windows of Smith Center. The Student Union will post beginning dates for distribution which will continue until 5 p.m. on Thursday or as long as the supply lasts.

Guest tickets are only available on Oct. 6 and 20 for the Blue/White games and the Yugoslav game respectively.

A limited number of tickets will be sold at $12 Sept. 15 for the Los Angeles Lakers-Chicago Bulls exhibition game that will be held Oct. 18, after the N.C. State homecoming game.

emerged. This year, UNC will begin with basics, and Humes is the man designed to carry the load.

Brad Lopp will start the year at fullback, and Hall almost assuredly will begin at quarterback. Rumors of Mark Maye's return have been floating around, but Maye says he is still only throwing every other day in practice. He will hold for kicks this season, but it seems doubtful that he will be ready to quarterback at the beginning of this season.

Eric Streater, who ran a 4.38 40 in practice the other day, will be the primary receiver. Eric Lewis will be at the other receiver since Quint Smith is out for the year with an injury.

On defense, Reuben Davis and Tim Goad anchor the Tar Heels' eight-man front alignment. Davis was All-ACC as a sophomore last season. Rudolph will be the top linebacker returning, and the defensive secondary returns Norris Davis and Walter Bailey.

"We played very well at times on defense last season, but we must play that way for the entire game," Crum says. "We need more consistency."

The kicking game was a problem for UNC last year. Kenny Miller and Lee Gliarmis are both back and will get some time, and Miller's foray at wide receiver is now a thing of the past. Miller may do double-duty at punter, as Tommy Barnhardt, UNC's most valuable player last season, is gone.

Overall, this team is harder to characterize than most UNC units. It's neither particularly young nor senior-laden, neither particularly talented or bereft of stars. With a quick win against The Citadel at home on Sept. 6 and at least one road victory in the next two games, this UNC team may surprise the ACC. Those old VW bugs still can get up and go occasionally.

Baseball update: Mets still rolling

By JAMES SUROWIECKI
Assistant Sports Editor

Before this baseball season began, much of the talk was about the New York Mets and how they were expected to take it all. At least that's what much of the talk in this office was about. Well, the Mets have really been no surprise, but other teams and players have, and it's been a rather fine year for baseball.

The talk of baseball remains the Mets. Going into Tuesday's games, they were 37 games over .500 and 17 games in front of second-place Montreal. Led by a brilliant pitching staff and a deep offensive attack, the Mets appear flawless as they cruise down the homestretch toward their first division title since 1973.

Davey Johnson has done a magnificent job of managing this club. His set five-man rotation of Sid Fernandez, Dwight Gooden, Rick Aguilera, Bob Ojeda and Ron Darling is the best in the league, and with the recent revival of Aguilera does not have a weak link. Prior to his last start, in fact, the former BYU standout had been pitching as well as anyone on the club. Ojeda, acquired from the Red Sox in a trade which seems to have helped both teams, is 13-4 and shows no signs of the collapse which some said was inevitable. Like John Tudor, he has been freed from the claustrophobic nightmare of Fenway's Green Monster and has responded beautifully.

Fernandez is also 13-4 and seems to have fulfilled his enormous potential, while Darling stands at 11-4. As for the Doctor, Gooden (12-4) has been nowhere near as overpowering as he was last year, but is still an ace.

If the Mets have a weakness, aside from a shortstop who can hit and field, it may be their bullpen. That's a curious thing to say when Jesse Orosco has 16 saves and Roger McDowell 13 saves to go along with an 12-6 record. But neither Orosco nor McDowell have been sharp of late, and that could be dangerous in a short playoff series. The expected emergence of Randy Myers could take on added importance before the season ends.

As for hitting, just about everyone on the Mets has done it. With the long-needed release of George Foster, Rafael Santana is the only weak offensive link. Darryl Strawberry, although he has not had the season some expected, has been his usual phenomenal self, while Gary Carter, now on the 15-day disabled list, has 19 homers and 87 RBI despite an inordinately low batting average. Keith Hernandez leads the league in walks and is hovering around the .300 mark, and the supporting cast of Dykstra, Knight, Mitchell, Backman and Co. has been magnificent. The Mets are the best baseball team to come down the pike in a long time.

Heard enough about the Mets? Well, the rest of the National League is pretty interesting, as well. In the East, the only battle left is for second place, where Montreal, Philadelphia and St. Louis are all entangled. The Cardinals' story has been particularly baffling, as last year's winningest team has fallen to a mere .500 team. And the Cards are only 59-59 because they've won 23 of their last 32 games. Whitey Herzog seems as confused as anyone.

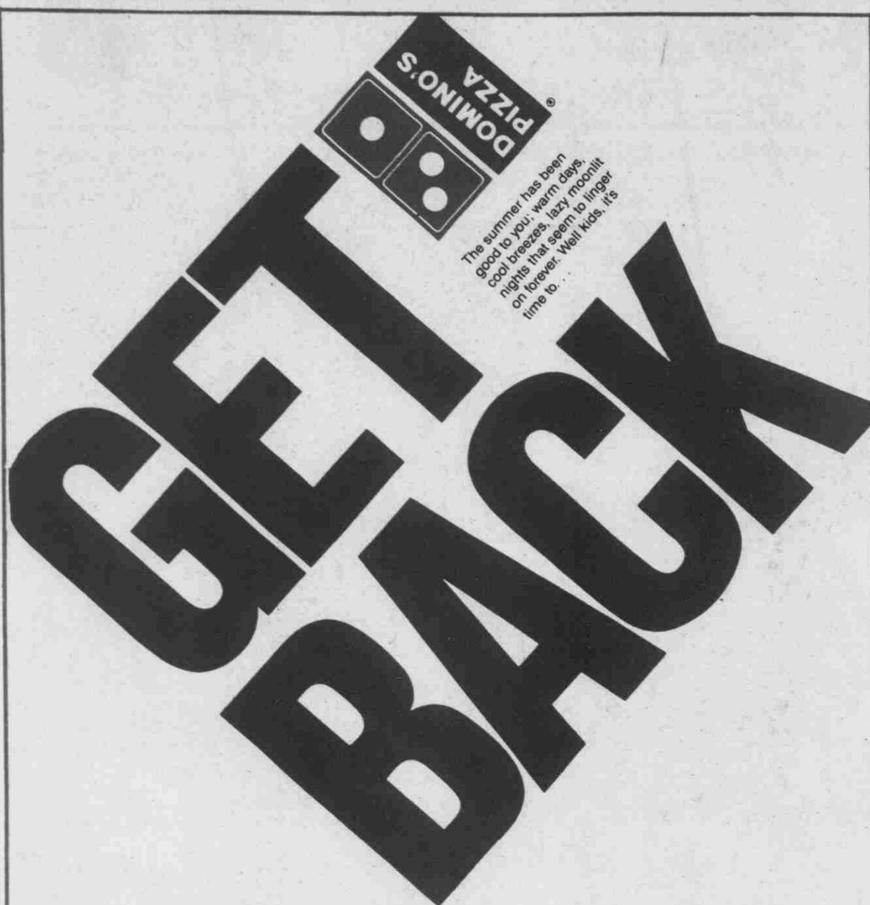

Actually, the way the media has reacted to St. Louis' demise reveals much about how little they understand baseball. Last year, Vince Coleman was painted as the hero of the Cardinals' rise to glory. Since Coleman was on base, distracting the pitchers, stealing bases, forcing the pitchers to throw fastballs to Tommy Herr and Willie McGee, the Cards were able to win. In truth, Coleman's positive contribution to St. Louis came primarily from his speed in the outfield and his ability to eliminate the double play. But the media refused to see it that way.

Of course this year very little is said about the effects of Coleman's speed. After all, he's stealing just as much, and in many respects is having a better season. But the Cards have had a terrible year, and the reason for that is because the people who really mattered last year - the Herrs, McGees and Clarks, who have not done the job. The only one who has is Ozzie Smith, but even he can't carry a team by himself. The truth of the matter, as this year's version of the Cardinals shows, is that stolen bases have very little to do with winning.

The rest of the East is decidedly uninteresting, mainly because they have no hope of winning. Two people worth mentioning, though, are Mike Schmidt and Von Hayes of the Phillies, who have both turned in marvelous seasons. Schmidt leads the league in slugging, homers and RBI and is sixth in on-base percentage. Hayes is hitting .296, with 58 walks, 31 doubles, 72 runs scored and another 68 driven in.

In the West, the big stories are the Giants and the Astros, as well as the splendid performance of Fernando Valenzuela, who should be a shoo-in for the Cy Young. Too much has been written about San Francisco already, so we'll let Roger Craig's "hum-baby" troops lie, although the job he's done with a pitching staff of castoffs is remarkable. As for Houston, right now it's the Glenn Davis-Kevin Bass show, as both young players are having amazing years. Davis is going to be one of the best sluggers in baseball, although he needs to walk more. One man with no problem in that department is Bill Doran, the Astro leadoff man who
