

Lines drawn on divestment issue

The UNC Anti-Apartheid Support Group plans to continue pursuing full divestment of the University funds in companies doing business with South Africa, according to a group member.

"We have had a few meetings and we're ironing out plans for some things in the fall," said Cindy Hahamovitch, a second-year graduate student.

In April, the University Endowment Board voted not to divest but resolved to encourage South African companies to work toward ending the apartheid government.

Duke University divested over the summer, and Hahamovitch said she hopes the action will put some pressure on UNC's trustees to follow. "Unfortunately, Southern schools seem to be the last to design their policies along progressive lines," she said.

Hahamovitch said the University gives scholarships to South African students as a diversionary technique to avoid divestment.

The UNC College Republicans plan to continue working against divestment, according to group chairman Bill Peaslee.

"We will continue educating the campus about the cost of divestment on the University and the national level," Peaslee said. "Divestment will not help the situation in South Africa."

"We'll see how active the Anti-Apartheid Support Group gets and we'll make sure the University doesn't divest," he said.

Botanical gardens to hold fest

By SHEILA SIMMONS

A bonsai demonstration, children's treasure hunt, traditional folk music concert, and several other free public activities will be featured during the University's Botanical Garden's 14th Annual Labor Day Open House on Monday, Sept. 1.

The event will run from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. It will feature the Triangle Bonsai Society demonstrating bonsai and the art of dwarfing trees by special methods of culture. Children will get the opportunity to familiarize themselves with the gardens by participating in a treasure hunt.

Clark Jones, an early American autoharp, guitar, and banjo songs specialist, will play traditional folk and blues music along with guitarist Lightin' Wells, who performs with the playing styles of Robert Johnson, Woody Guthrie and Jimmy Rogers. Hammer dulcimer maker and player Michael Mann of Wilkesboro will perform on his instrument.

Other highlights include an exhibition of herbarium sheets of rare plants and N.C. State University professor J.C. Raulston's display of flower stamps from across the world.

He will also submit a labeled collection of dozens of common plants featured in a fall wild flower exhibit.

Experts will be present to discuss growing, harvesting and cooking with herbs and a training session on propagation, cultivation and landscape uses of Southeastern native ferns, will be held.

A high-technology demonstration of hardware and techniques used in mass-producing plants and seed cleaning also will be given.

The Cary Gourd Society will explain the many uses of gourds, from the utilitarian to the ornamental, while garden volunteers will examine the sizes, shapes, and colors of wild flower seeds.

At a "Gardening in the Piedmont" workshop, local gardeners will be on hand to discuss problems and solutions of gardening in this area.

Freshly squeezed cider from an antique apple cider press and other refreshments will be available, and open house T-shirts featuring a new 1986 design will be on sale for $6.

The garden is located off the U.S. 15-501 and N.C. 54 bypass on Laurel Hill Road. For more information, call (919) 967-2246.
