Women's soccer blasts Mercer

By EDDY LANDRETH
Staff Writer

A crowd of about 50 people witnessed a human sacrifice of 11 people at a time, at Fetzer Field Sunday.

UNC's women soccer team mercifully slaughtered Mercer University 9-0, in what amounted to a simulated game for the Tar Heels.

Actually, the Tar Heels did demonstrate mercy for these sacrificial lambs, or Bears in this case — the Mercer Teddy Bears — by only adding two second half goals to their 7-0 halftime lead.

Sophomore back Lori Henry started the assault on Mercer's goal at 5:18 in the first half on an assist from senior midfielder Marcia McDermott and sophomore midfielder Tracey Bates.

UNC went on to outshoot the Teddy Bears 33-0, with seven more people scoring: sophomore forward

Carrie Serwetnyk, freshman forward Julie Guarnotta, who had two goals, Bates, McDermott, freshman forward Sherri McDavid, junior midfielder Lisa Duffy and freshman midfielder Donna Rigley.

Five more people contributed assists: freshman back and midfielder Ava Hyatt, McDavid, sophomore midfielder Wendy Gebauer, senior forward Bettina Bernardi and Rigley.

Although he did not expect to beat UNC, Mercer head coach Dana Robinson said he had hoped for a better effort from his team.

"We're nowhere close to the level of players (as UNC)," Robinson said, "so our only chance was to work hard on the field. Basically, we didn't even do that. A little more hard work and several of the goals may not have been scored."

The most obvious question is what can UNC gain from a game such as this one? Head coach Anson Dorrance said he is able to spread around the playing time in these games.

"We have a lot of players who deserve playing time," Dorrance said. "In this type of match environment, we're giving it to them."

In games where the team has a commanding lead at halftime, Dorrance said he has the players play a kind of game within a game in the second half. Players must pass the ball more often, instead of just taking it down the field and trying to run up the score. They work on their defense, and their teamwork in general.

By doing this, he said, the team can learn and improve, even in a 9-0 slaughter.

And, for the Mercer Teddy Bears, the event was a chance to witness the best, Robinson said. "We got to see some of the best players in the country and in the world."

Men booters surprise Furman

The UNC men's soccer team upset the 8-1 Furman Paladins with a 4-0 shutout Saturday afternoon as freshman John Cocking scored two goals and assisted another. The win improved the Tar Heels' season record to 8-4.

"I was very pleased, not only with the win but with the margin," UNC coach Anson Dorrance said. "That team just finished beating Clemson 3-1 and for us to beat them 4-0, right after they beat Clemson is a great win for us." UNC had lost to Clemson 3-1 earlier in the year.

Most of the first half was a defensive battle as neither team could score. But with two minutes left in the half, David Smyth slammed the ball into the corner of the goal off a rebound to put the Tar Heels on top, 1-0.

UNC goalie Brad Davis was a major factor in the first half, as he had a several nice saves.

"He kept us in the game in the first half," said Dorrance.

Davis was also pleased with his performance. "I felt really good," he said. "I felt like I was a little more assertive and that's something we need. I felt that everybody was listening to me and doing what I was telling them and it worked out really well."

The second half started out much like the first as neither team could get near a goal, but with nine minutes to go in the game, the Tar Heels had a surge of energy and the rest of the game was theirs.

"My impression was that we were a little fitter than they were but also if you look at the kind of goals that we scored, we scored unorthodox goals on fast breaks," said Dorrance.

"I think in the second half, we created far more chances than they did. In the first half, they created a lot more chances but in the second half, our defense shut down their attack so it was almost like a contrast in halves."

The John Cocking show began when he passed the ball to Mark Devey, who headed it over the outstretched arms of Furman goalie John Dee, for the first of three consecutive UNC goals in the second half.

About one minute later, Cocking, a freshman from Roswell, Ga. caught Dee unprepared as he kicked the ball into the goal off a pass from Dino Megaloudis.

Cocking also had the last goal with six minutes left, on a pass from Chad Ashton, when he once again found Furman's goalie out of position.

The statistics show that UNC controlled the ball, as the Tar Heels outshot Furman 19-8, although a number of Tar Heel shots misfired. Davis had four saves, twice as many as the Furman goalie.

"As long as we can score the goals and as long as we can work well in the back and keep them out, then we can't lose," Davis said.

Field hockey blanks two foes

For North Carolina's top-ranked field hockey team, good things come in pairs. More specifically, shutout victories came in a pair for the Tar Heels this weekend. Opposing William and Mary on Sunday and Appalachian State on Friday, UNC, continuing its five-game win streak, blistered to two convincing blowouts.

North Carolina's 7-0 domination over William and Mary was only slightly more challenging than the team's 11-0 pounding of Appalachian State.

In fact, the games merely gave the Tar Heels a chance to practice and polish their team skills.

The team was exactly that this weekend — a group of athletes combining their talents to produce the most effective results. "It was truly a team effort this weekend, and I'm very pleased with that," said coach Karen Shelton.

On Sunday, five of the Tar Heel's seven goals against the Indians were a result of excellent teamwork. "We would rather beat our opponent with an assist than one on one," Shelton said.

Freshman forward Julie Blaisse, who took the first of Carolina's 27 shots on William and Mary's goalkeeper Sharon Barone, also scored the Tar Heel's first goal. The goal was set up when Blaisse passed to junior midfielder Lori Bruney, who drove it back to Blaisse for an assist.

With almost nine minutes remaining, Bruney passed again, this time to junior midfielder Betsy Gillespie who tapped it through defenders to teammate Maryellen Falcone. Falcone scored and, assisted Bruney in the third UNC goal shortly afterwards.

The most spectacular goal came with 1:36 left in the half. Gillespie lifted a line drive into the far right corner of the net from 25 yards out to give UNC a 4-0 lead before intermission.

The Indians, who had been purely on the defensive thus far, began the second half with more aggression. They took 10 shots on goal, but were unable to hit the net behind starting goalkeeper Kathy Mulvey and backup goalkeeper Krista Horstman.

Meanwhile, both Blaisse and Bruney scored assisted goals, hiking the score to 6-0. Sophomore forward Sharon Ross, capitalizing on one of UNC's 13 penalty corners, scored the last goal with 12:11 remaining in the half.

In preparing North Carolina for Sunday's game, Shelton encouraged her team to draw out the opponent's defense and focus on fundamentals. Similar strategy propelled Friday's 11-0 victory over Appalachian State.

North Carolina had not beaten an opponent by such a large margin since their 10-0 victory over Wake Forest in 1981.

At the end of the first half, North Carolina had prevented the Mountaineers from taking a shot on goal and was floating on an eight point lead. Falcone, who had two goals, accompanied six other Tar Heel's in the scoring barrage.

Using the maximum number of substitutions allowable, UNC played most of the second half with only three starters. Even so, the Mountaineers had only two shots inside UNC's circle.

Senior forward Andrea Walsh added two more goals to a first-half goal to get the hat trick, and sophomore forward Sharon Ross punctuated the scoring with 6:06 left to bring the score to 11-0.

Shelton said that North Carolina "played well in possession" and "opened passing lanes," another solid proof of a team playing like a team.
