

Soviets send home five U.S. diplomats

From Associated Press reports

MOSCOW The Soviet Union expelled five U.S. diplomats on Sunday, five days after the last of 25 Soviet U.N. envoys ordered out of the United States returned home. A Kremlin official linked the expulsions to the U.S. order against the Soviet U.N. diplomats in Moscow. In Washington, Secretary of State George Shultz responded, "We will protest, and we will take some action."

Sunday's expulsion of four diplomats from Moscow and one from Leningrad was announced by the official news agency Tass. It said in a brief report that the Foreign Ministry determined they had engaged in "impermissible activities," a catch phrase for espionage.

The five are Jack Roberts and four diplomats from the U.S. Embassy in Moscow: William Norville, a first secretary, Charles Ehrenfield, a third secretary, and attaches Gary Lonquist and Dave Harris.

The Tass announcement did not mention the U.S. expulsions of the Soviet diplomats from the United Nations, but Georgi Arbatov, a chief Kremlin spokesman, indicated that the Soviets were retaliating. Arbatov spoke in a satellite interview from Moscow.

Spangler

North Carolinians today look to Spangler and the university system for leaders "to light a new fire for North Carolina," Martin said, speaking for the people of North Carolina.

"President Spangler is the one fellow in North Carolina whom I think has a better job than I do," Martin said. "For nearly 200 years, the graduates of this University have served this state, this country and the world."

Alumnus Kuralt said he found out earlier than most people about Spangler's superior qualities, when "Dicky" Spangler, then 13, ran for class president. "I'm voting for you again," he told the new president.

UNC alumni have put into Spangler's hands the care of the University they loved and still love, Kuralt said. "The number of living alumni of the 16 universities is 529,592," he told Spangler. "Most of them will come to you in person."

Gary Mauney, UNC Association of Student Governments president, said the students in North Carolina's public universities will happily offer their assistance to the new president.

Spangler will have to answer difficult questions about how to improve the content and character of academic programs and keep education open to all, Mauney said.

Joseph Branch, retired chief justice of the N.C. Supreme Court, administered the oath of office to Spangler. A boxed lunch reception in McCorkle Place, the quadrangle between Franklin Street and the Old Well, followed the ceremony.

Spangler outlined four areas in which he wanted the University system to make a difference in the future. "It is critically important that the university (system) accept responsibility for eliminating disabling illiteracy in our people," he said. "Our universities educate those who will be the teachers in our public schools. How effective those teachers are will determine the quality of our universities' incoming freshmen as well as the productivity of employees in our industries."

The University is now studying a program to improve teacher education, Spangler said.

Secondly, Spangler said, health care research must be well-financed. "We must give our doctors the laboratories, the scientific equipment and the support personnel to enable them to fulfill their mission."

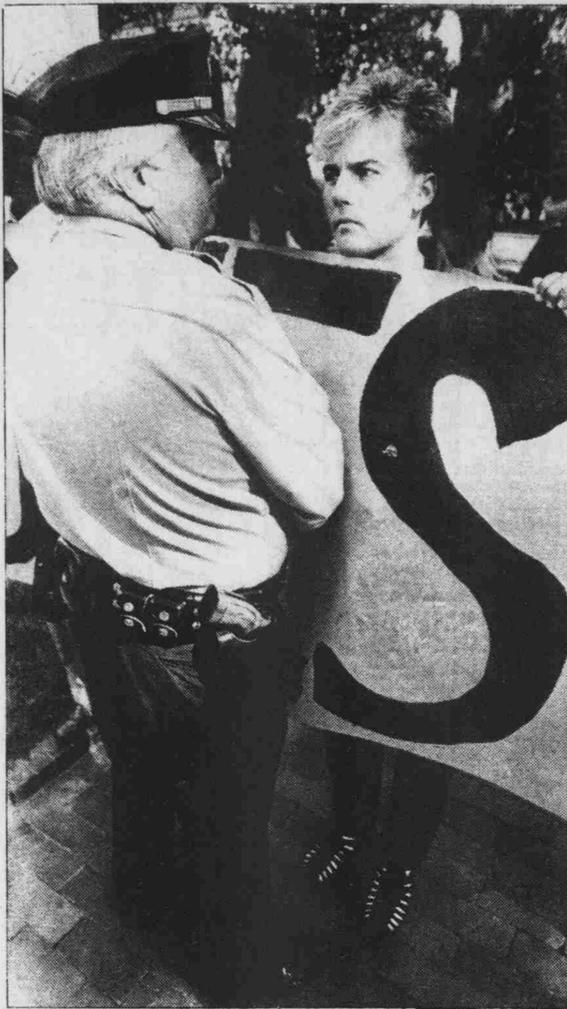

Also, the university system can help determine which industries and occupations will make North Carolinians prosperous. "The university can act as a catalyst to produce a sounder economic base for our state," he said.

"We have capital and we have leaders. If put together properly, those elements will bring employment and profit to the people in our state."

But Spangler said the first duty of the university system is to educate the 130,000 students on its 16 campuses. "The main purpose of the university has been and will continue to be to encourage students to enrich their lives through study and to gain a lifelong desire for learning."

Paying professors well, providing researchers with resources and speaking out for academic freedom will enable the university system to fulfill its educational mission, he said.

"We must all work at finding the answers," he said. "What we are trying to do, after all, is something we North Carolinians believe we are good at: inspiring our citizens to become the best they can be."

movement, to show President Spangler, the University community and guests that we are seriously committed to divestment."

Group members planned to march in front of the audience before Spangler's speech but were stopped by University Police and Frederic Schroeder, dean of students.

"I wouldn't call it restraining them," Schroeder said Sunday. "It was a request that they wait until a better time."

After much arguing with Schroeder and Maj. Charles Mauer of University Police, the students were allowed to march following Spangler's speech.

"It's not the signs, it's the statement," Dale McKinley, group member, said during the protest. "If we put a 'Support the Contras' sign up we probably wouldn't have any problems."

Group member Marguerite Arnold said stopping a student protest was "repression."

"So much for freedom of expression," she said.

Prior to the protesters' march, discussion with University officials and the group was heated.

"I don't think (the support group) would gain the respect of the University (by protesting)," Mauer said. "It's not in the best interest of the University. I'm not worried about South Africa."

McKinley responded, "Why? Would the University be embarrassed about what we're doing or what they're doing?"

The students marched in front of the steps of South Building and up the center aisle in pairs after Spangler's speech. Several students hoisted a banner in front of the steps while the others carried signs reading, "UNC Stop Sanctioning Apartheid," "No Profit From Racism" and "Spangler Take A Stand."

Schroeder said Sunday that he has had positive reactions from some of the faculty.

"I thought (the protest) was a very appropriate expression of a position they support," he said.

Bryan Hassel, student body president and group member, called the protest "wonderful."

"Everyone noticed it," he said. "It distracted people from the business at hand but didn't disrupt the business at hand. It was perfectly appropriate."

After bickering, cooperating, Congress produces results

From Associated Press reports

WASHINGTON — The 99th Congress, by odd turns bitterly partisan and pragmatically cooperative, has left an uncertain legacy of watershed legislation that will touch all Americans.

From modest measures to begin Daylight Savings Time three weeks earlier and designate the rose as the national flower, to the most sweeping tax code revision in a generation and the biggest spending bill in history, the Congress that ended Saturday night compiled a record of staggering scope.

Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., summarized the session in a single word: "Productive." But, he added, "Not every policy dilemma was resolved and some of our answers are less than complete."

The exact impact of the tax changes and a rewrite of the nation's immigration laws will take years to determine.

Leader wants party system

KABUL, Afghanistan — Afghan leader Najibullah, now in his sixth month as head of a Moscow-backed government, says reconciliation with Moslem guerrillas is his main goal and that he envisions political parties in the future.

Najibullah, 40, also indicated that he is not trying to impose a Soviet system on Afghanistan, but seeks an independent path.

He spoke during a 2 1/2-hour meeting late Saturday with Western reporters who were invited to Afghanistan to witness the withdrawal of six Soviet regiments, or between 5,000 to 8,000 soldiers.

According to Western estimates, about 118,000 Soviet troops have been stationed in Afghanistan since 1979 to help the government fight the nationwide Moslem uprising.

Najibullah said his People's Democratic Party of Afghanistan is willing to accept rival political parties and a style of government markedly different from that of Moscow to end the fighting.

GOP discloses records

WASHINGTON — The National Republican Senatorial Committee says it wants to prove it has nothing to hide — so it's turned over 59,000 pages of financial disclosure documents in the largest filing the Federal Election Commission has ever received.

The party committee, an arm of the GOP whose goal is to help elect Republican senators, turned in 12 cartons of paper to the deadline.

Report recommends more faculty control

By BETH WILLIAMS

Staff Writer

The University needs to have more control over budget and internal affairs, according to a committee report given at Friday's Faculty Council meeting. This report, given by the University Priorities Committee, contains recommendations for management improvements in the 16-member UNC system.

The committee's research began in September 1985, at the request of George Kennedy, chairman of the faculty. The report outlines specific problems of the University and recommendations for action to correct them.

"We have accepted the task of highlighting, elaborating and emphasizing points made previously," the report said.

Specific needs outlined in the report include increased authority to manage the University's budget and personnel.

The report calls for "immediate administrative action to revise the personnel system," so the University may become more competitive in hiring.

Increasing monies for research and teaching, fringe benefits for faculty, and classroom renovations also are discussed in this report.

Also Friday, Chancellor Christopher Fordham told the council that although the University enjoys academic freedom, the administration and budget is being closely regulated.

Fordham also commented on the University's contract with Glaxo, Inc. The proposal to enter into the pharmaceutical research contract with Glaxo, a private company, was "taken with great scrutiny," Fordham said.

To minimize danger, University authorities must be able to inspect all research before any student may be involved, he said.

Also during the meeting, plans for reactivating a faculty club and contributing toward the construction of the Alumni Center were discussed.

The Faculty Council also accepted a resolution from the faculty of Arts and Sciences against Gov. Jim Martin's proposed budget cut of 3 percent.
