

Volleyball tunes up for ACCs

By PHYLLIS A. FAIR
Staff Writer

UNC took two wins from the West Virginia Mountaineers and the Florida International Sunblazers to raise their overall record to 23-12 in weekend volleyball action.

The Tar Heels defeated the Mountaineers in straight games 15-5, 15-7 and 15-9 Friday night, but it took four games Saturday to block out the Sunblazers' rays: 2-15, 15-2, 15-12, 15-5.

The volleyball team designated Friday night as senior night for two outstanding players, Jill Berkebile and Dawn Wood.

Wood and Berkebile played in the last home of their volleyball career Saturday, but Friday night was when they showed West Virginia why seniors do it better.

With support from the rest of the team, both of the seniors put on an impressive display of blocking and spiking.

"It didn't take the Tar Heels any time to show West Virginia they meant business," said

Jolene Nagel, the volleyball coach. "We had trouble with our serve reception."

In Saturday's match against the Sunblazers, UNC had to regroup as a team, after getting pounded, 15-2, in the first game. It took the Tar Heels just a few minutes to do that, and then they were ready to play ball.

UNC turned the tables on Florida International in the second, by breezing to a 15-2 win, and then handily won the last two games.

Ann Palmer, a freshman from Tallahassee, Fla., who started in the place of the injured freshman Sharon German, came in off the bench to help the Tar Heels defeat the Sunblazers.

German injured her shoulder in Friday's night match, and head volleyball coach Peggy Bradley-Doppes said she didn't play German because she wanted to save her for the ACC tournament this weekend.

Doppes said her team felt confident going into the tournament. "If we can play the last 20 feet, we can beat anybody in the conference," Doppes said. "The girls know they have to play defense, and we're hoping to play ball two or three more weeks after Thanksgiving."

active sense, but there was a real fight midway through the second quarter. Earlier in the period, tempers had gotten a little hot, and the referees had refrained from calling penalties. They reaped the fruits of that omission when the two teams tangled after a Virginia punt.

The rumble was the usual, a lot of jawing and a little shoving, but UNC's Eric Lewis and Virginia's Eric Clay were kicked out of the game. Afterward, the usually mild-mannered Lewis was surprised at his ejection.

"I was just sitting back, watching, because I didn't want to start fighting and get kicked out," he said. "That's not me, that's not my style. Then No. 2 (Clay) just jumped in my face and smacked me. When I swung back, it was just reaction."

UNC picked up a 24-yard Lee Gliarmis field goal early in the second half for a 13-0 lead. Three series later, after Maye and Majkowski traded interceptions, Fenner retook center stage.

On second and seven, Maye pitched back to Fenner, who glided to his right, waiting for a hole to develop. Lineman Harris Barton wiped out a Virginia linebacker to spring Fenner free, and the big tailback burst through the hole, leaving two would-be tacklers in the dust. He straight-armed cornerback Kevin Gould near midfield and cruised into the end zone, showboating the last five yards and taunting the nearest Virginia defender.

"I had to make a few moves going through the hole," Fenner said of his 73-yard jaunt. "The line did a great job blocking. I just made a couple of comments at the end, just some player-to-player comments."

Free speech was the order of the day at Kenan, apparently. But Chuck Tabor, a UNC redshirt transfer from Missouri, was displeased with two students' exercise of their First Amendment rights. The students held up a "Fire Crum" sign just after Fenner's run. Tabor leaped over the restraining fence, grabbed the sign and broke it over his knee.

"I love Crum to death and I have a lot of respect for him," Tabor said. "When you see something like that, you've got to protect him."

The incident took the spotlight away from Fenner, but only for the moment. After backup Cavalier quarterback Scott Secules toosed a 10-yard touchdown to John Ford to break the shutout and make things more interesting, Fenner was given the ball again (and again and again).

On UNC's last drive he ran eight times for 42 yards, shattering Amos Lawrence's single-game standard for ACC rushers. That drive ended with a Maye-to-Streater nine-yard touchdown pass. The TD came after Virginia coach George Welsh inexplicably called timeout with 21 seconds remaining and his team down by 13 points.

"You say to yourself, 'They must want the ball back,'" Crum said. "So we gave it to them."

tance of maintaining Proposition 48, a policy that sets minimum Scholastic Aptitude Test scores for freshman admissions.

Spangler said he would report to the board after the NCAA's January convention to consider the system's next step.

A report from the University faculty athletic committee and sent by Chancellor Christopher Fordham agreed that action by the NCAA would be more effective than unilateral action taken by the University. The report advocated keeping the number of contests in some sports at the current number but extending the season's length.

Reducing the number of contests could have a negative effect on recruiting unless the NCAA acts consistently for all Division I schools, according to the report.

Fordham said that, if the NCAA decided in January to shorten the season lengths, the University would probably go along with the decision. "But we're pretty good at fighting our battle," he said.

Fordham said Sunday he hoped the NCAA would consider ineligibility for freshmen in men's Division I and IA football and basketball.

Spangler's report was prepared from Chancellor's Special Reports not released with the larger document "The First Annual Report on Intercollegiate Athletics."

Currently, UNC-system officials are being sued for the documents' release. A superior court ruled last week that the documents were of public record and ordered Spangler and Arthur Padilla, associate vice president of academic affairs, to make the reports public. Padilla said Sunday that he would not comment on the reports because they were still under litigation.
