Senators urge investigation

From Associated Press reports

WASHINGTON — Senate Republican leader Bob Dole on Sunday urged President Reagan to convene a special session of Congress to appoint a Watergate-style committee to investigate secret White House arms sales to Iran and money transfers to the Nicaraguan rebels.

Dole (R-Kan.) said he wanted the president "to call a special session of Congress next week and form this select committee."

Sen. Robert Byrd, the Democratic leader of the Senate who will take Dole's post as majority leader next year, also called for a select joint session, but he said it "would have to wait until Congress reconvened" in January.

He said that calling a special session would "contribute to the crisis atmosphere," and instead urged Reagan to appoint an independent council.

One senior Justice Department official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said Sunday he believed "the weight of the arguments now favor moving to an independent council." But he did not believe that a decision had been made to take the probe out of the hands of the Attorney General Edwin Meese III and other Justice officials.

Byrd and Dole said they had discussed the proposal to name a special panel, which the Democratic leader said must be done by the full Congress, "so that the committee would have all the powers of subpoena, . . . which the two leaders themselves cannot give it."

Dole, interviewed on ABC's "This Week with David Brinkley," said Congress "ought to be called back to town next week," rather than waiting until it reconvenes with new members in January.

White House spokesman Dan Howard called Dole's proposal "a novel idea," but declined direct comment on it.

"We simply haven't had time to consider it," he said. "No one is more interested in getting to the bottom of this than the president, and he wants to do so quickly."

Reagan, on his way to Washington from a Thanksgiving holiday at his California ranch, told reporters, "We're doing everything necessary to get at the truth, and we will make the truth known." The president did not answer any more questions.

Although Republicans will retain control of the Senate until the 100th Congress meets in January, Dole said a Democrat would probably be appointed.

Byrd said a special council should be appointed to investigate disclosures that a White House aide, Lt. Col. Oliver North, arranged for up to $30 million in proceeds from the secret sale of arms to Iran to be channeled to help Contra rebels fighting Nicaragua's leftist Sandinista government.

Meese "is personally close to the president, . . . is a member of the National Security Council and . . . has said that everyone should stand shoulder to shoulder with the president," Byrd said.

Byrd declined to speculate whether Meese knew about the Nicaraguan connection before his investigation, although the attorney general supplied the president with the legal opinion the led to a partial easing of the arms embargo on Iran last Jan. 17.

Tar Heels venture into UCLA's lair

Now that UNC is finished weeding through the grass skirts it faced in Hawaii over the weekend, the Tar Heels get down to business of basketball in Los Angeles tonight at they face the Bruins of UCLA at Pauley Pavilion (10 p.m. ESPN, Ch. 5).

Last year, Dean Smith's team soundly beat UCLA in Carmichael Auditorium, 107-70, in the first game of the season for both squads. It was a defeat which brought out the philosophical in Bruin coach Walt Hazzard. "We got our butts kicked," he said.

In that game, Tar Heel center Brad Daugherty (now of the Cleveland Cavaliers) went 13-for-13 from the field and 5-for-5 from the free throw line for a career-high 31 points. His immaculate performance, however, came against a team with only one player over 6-8.

That player was 6-10 junior center Jack Haley, the son of a former world-class surfer. He scored all of two points in that game and averaged only 4.3 points for the entire season. Talk about a laidback kinda center, like, totally.

But this year, neither team is opening its season with this nationally televised, Dick-Vitale-All-Time-Dream-Matchup game. UNC raided the Hawaiian Isles for a pair of wins and UCLA faced Santa Clara on Saturday.

And neither team has the same situation it had last year regarding the men under the glass.

The Tar Heels are without the services of last season's top two big men. Daugherty (in Cleveland) and Warren Martin (in Switzerland) are both playing professional ball. In the place of those two true centers are four quasi-forwards — seniors Joe Wolf and Dave Popson and freshmen J.R. Reid and Scott Williams.

Lure of Genesis tickets draws line of diehards

By JO FLEISCHER
Assistant University Editor

It looked like a rock 'n' roll refugee camp.

At the beginning of a line stretching about 400 yards around the Smith Center, Shannon Swing sat in a folding lounge chair holding a five-day vigil for tickets to a concert by the popular rock group Genesis.

Swing arrived on Thanksgiving Day at 4:45 a.m. from Appalachian State University, hoping to snap up the first tickets for Genesis's Jan. 31 concert when they go on sale Tuesday.

Eager to buy up the whole front row, Swing said he didn't mind forsaking Thanksgiving, five days of his life or even classes to see one of his favorite bands. "If it wasn't Genesis, I wouldn't be here," he said. "Well, unless it was the Police."

Swing was among 70 people camped out in front of the Smith Center over the weekend.

Armed with several blankets and $38 of groceries, Swing, a 20-year-old ASU sophomore, was prepared to buy up to 30 tickets for his friends back in Boone. "They'll make really great Christmas presents," he said.

Behind Swing, who camped directly in front of the ticket window, a long line of beach chairs, tents and makeshift shelters snaked its way from the windows — located under an overhanging roof — around a quarter of the building.

Underneath the roof, people passed time in beach chairs covered by layers of sleeping bags and blankets. They watched Sunday football games on portable televisions, and they listened to radios and Genesis tapes. A steady drizzle confined those outside to their tents or makeshift homes.

Everyone's habitats — most individuals claimed a four-foot square or smaller temporary home — were surrounded by textbooks, groceries, discarded fast food wrappers and empty beer and soda cans.

Swing said his Thanksgiving was saved because of the kindness of UNC senior Robert Huffines and his brother Howie, both of Raleigh. The Huffines' arrived Friday night to claim the second and third places, and brought enough turkey to share, Swing said.

The Huffines' said they, too, were avid Genesis fans, but they hedged their bets by checking in with Swing numerous times Thursday and Friday before committing themselves to the line — and the uncomfortable elements.

Swing and the Huffines said they were sure their efforts would be rewarded, despite rumours circulating up and down the growing line that some of the best tickets had already been reserved for radio station giveaways. Hearsay of a ticket limit that oscillated between a six, eight or 30-ticket maximum did little to daunt the campers' hopes. Smith Center officials could not be reached Sunday evening.

Henry Clayton, a University Police dispatcher, said UNC had no policy on camping out for tickets, adding that the past tradition of camping in front of Carmichael Auditorium for basketball tickets created no problems. Police do drive by the Smith Center periodically to make sure no problems arise, he said.

A list was circulated up and down the line by Augustin Diodati, a UNC

UNC breezes to wins over two Hawaiian foes

From staff and wire reports

Dean Smith's Tar Heels didn't spend Thanksgiving weekend at home, watching football and stuffing themselves on dead fowl. Instead, the UNC basketball team was confronted with the odious task of heading Horace Greeley and heading west. The result was a nice taste of summer in November and two easy wins on the side, all at the expense of a pair of Hawaiian teams who got a first-hand glimpse of what big-time basketball is really like.

Friday, UNC took a break from the sun and surf and rolled over Hawaii by a 98-78 count. The only way the Rainbows could have won was if the Tar Heels had been held up by Kilauea's temper tantrum and forfeited. But with 11 minutes to go, things were a little bit closer than coach Smith would have liked. Hawaii trailed just 60-54 at that point, and visions of upset no doubt danced in Rainbow heads.

The Tar Heels quickly dispelled those visions, ravaging the boards and running the fastbreak to perfection while reeling off nine straight points. Hawaii never got closer than 11 after that.

UNC's leading scorer thus far this season, Ranzino Smith, popped in 17 points on 7-of-11 shooting, while Joe Wolf chipped in 15 and Dave Popson 13. Just like Saturday's game, Friday's contest was characterized by balanced scoring for the Tar Heels, as Dean Smith liberally substituted and no one played more than 30 minutes.

Hawaii was led by freshman forward Chris Gaines, who debuted with a bang by scoring 23 points. Gaines was 10-of-10 from the line in a game in which the Rainbows went to the charity stripe 42 times. Also scoring in double figures for Hawaii were John Gabriel, with 13 points, and Alan Andrus, who had 12.

After Popson drained a free throw to finish off a three-point play with 11:54 left in the first half, UNC never trailed. The Tar Heels ran out to 16 point lead early in the second period before Hawaii came storming back. That lead was due in part to two baskets by 6-9 freshman J.R. Reid, who started the game and finished with 12 points.

Saturday night, UNC faced Hawaii-Loa, a NAIA school looking to pull a Chaminade. But the Silver Swords were nowhere in sight, and after an early scare, the Tar Heels ran away and hid in a 118-80 romp. The early fright came courtesy of the Mongoose, who hung tough for
