day to one week, Osmont said.

UNC participants have received pledges of support, and the money raised will go toward building a health center and day care center in San Marcos, Nicaragua, Osmont said.

Although there are groups supporting peace in Central America at other area universities, Osmont said she did not think either N.C. State University or Duke University were participating in the fast.

Todd Morman, a committee member who organized aspects of the fast, said the fast was a symbol of commitment.

"Not eating for one day is not an incredible sacrifice, but it makes you feel your commitment," he said.

Morman said the committee was trying to raise awareness about what was happening in Central America. He said if people were aware of documented studies by groups such as Amnesty International and knew the facts of the situation, they would work to correct the situation in Central America.

The silent vigil was used to open the fast because it was different from normal Pit activities, Morman said.

idence halls of their choice, Rustin said. "More people moved around before the lottery started," he said, "so a lot of people went through lottery in their new dorms, and there weren't as many people trying to move (into new residence halls) through the preliminary drawing."

Although fewer students who now live on campus entered the lottery, more off-campus students tried to get University housing. Rustin attributed the trend to the low cost of campus housing, which will probably increase only 2 to 3 percent this year.

mittee probably heard about WXYC through trade magazines, record companies or conventions.

A Rolling Stone magazine article in September 1986 about college radio stations might have boosted WXYC's chances to be nominated, he said.

"We were included in that article and our station manager even had his picture in there," Balcom said. "That could have had a major effect on the nomination committee."

WXYC's main purpose is to provide the University and the community with an alternative to other area stations, Balcom said. Other stations sometimes don't play music that could possibly hurt their reputations, he said.

"We want our listeners to hear all of the new stuff," Balcom said. "We don't hold back any music."

Balcom said he hoped that WXYC could continue to improve. The station could be nominated for the award again next year, he said.

"I don't expect us to make any radical changes in our production but there's always room for improvement," Balcom said. "Right now, we're just delighted to be commended for our work."
