

'Saved' from England

Lab Theatre presents brutal look at London life

By KELLY RHODES
Staff Writer

The fascination with the unknown elements of punk south London are explored in Edward Bond's play "Saved," this weekend's presentation by the Lab Theatre.

"Saved," written in the 1960s, was immediately banned by the British government for being obscene and offensive. Upon investigation by the Lord Chamberlain, the play was found not to be obscene, but a shockingly true view of south London society.

"One of the reasons I chose to do this play was the historical significance in Britain," said director Doug Wagner, a junior from High Point. "It abolished censorship in England and most of west Europe."

Written in a strict Cockney dialect, the play explores the lowest classes of London in a timeless, general way. "Bond had to come up with a literary style to fit a non-literary culture," Wagner said. The script features many unfamiliar slang terms and inflections, along with their phonetic spellings. Wagner said it took a British-usage dictionary to figure out what Bond was trying to say.

Bond also wrote no stage directions with the dialogue, leaving everything up to the director. "This offers a challenge to the actors and directors," Wagner said, explaining how the play is adapted to the 1979 setting he chose.

"The story deals with a south

London family who have become the product of their depressed environment," Wagner said. The older parents haven't spoken to one another in 20 years. Their promiscuous daughter Pam and her boyfriend Len are focal characters in the work.

"Len is a paragon optimist," Wagner said of the role played by Robin Agnew, a sophomore from the United Kingdom.

"This role was written for Robin," said cast member Maria Earman, who plays Pam. Of her own character, Earman said, "Well, she's a bitch; no one likes her really."

"(Pam) is an interesting role for me to play," said Earman, a freshman from Williamsburg, Va. "I had to deal with a lot of emotions."

The play itself is extremely violent. "There is a brutal stoning in Act I," Wagner said, adding that Bond was following the attention-grabber that Shakespeare used in "Macbeth" and "Julius Caesar."

"The rest of the play deals with that act of violence and how the characters deal with one another," he said.

Wagner feels that UNC's audience will quickly grasp the social problems that Bond presents. "The punks have a much more violent mindset, indifferent even," he said. "Despite violence and ill-feeling, though, it is still optimistic."

Wagner said the ending was hopeful and shocking in comparison to the rest of the play.

Pam's parents are played by Thomas Godfrey, a senior from the United Kingdom, and Heather Osborne, a junior from Williamston. The murderer, a former boyfriend of Pam's, is played by Quince Markham. Thirteen other students make up the rest of the ensemble of "nuns, whores, and housewives," Wagner said. "All are devoted to the social problem," he said.

Saved will be performed by the Lab Theatre Sunday and Monday at 4 and 8 p.m. and Tuesday at 5 p.m. in 06 Graham Memorial Hall.

Ticket info for concerts

Camping out at the Smith Center will not be allowed before 6 a.m. on the days of ticket sales for both the Billy Joel and the Jimmy Buffett concerts, according to Smith Center Public Relations Assistant Deana Nail. She said the Smith Center is not giving out numbers in advance either.

Joel tickets will go on sale at 10 a.m. Friday, and Buffett tickets will go on sale at 10 a.m. Monday. Nail said some Ticketrons may give out numbers or allow early camping.

Protest

A North Carolina civil court ruled that the DTH was a legitimate use of student fees, and Arrington had the option of not reading it.

Poston said his group would follow the same course of action even though those earlier attempts to alter the distribution of student fees were unsuccessful.

Council

Council member Art Werner asked if the fraternity members would consider a location other than Finley golf course.

Burnout supporters said they had considered other locations, especially Ehringhaus field, but decided Finley golf course was the best place for this event.

"Ehringhaus is surrounded by dorms and many more responsibilities would be put on us than we have now," Gerlach said.

This group might be more successful because they are arguing the case on religious grounds, Poston said. In a letter sent to UNC administrators Monday, the group said the CGLA's existence offended their Christian beliefs.

Poston said no decision would be made on the group's threat not to

If the town council grants the fraternity a noise permit for the Burnout, the bands could play above the 75 decibel minimum set by the town's new noise ordinance.

Council member Jonathan Howes said it is unusual for the council to pass a proposal the same night it is brought up, and the noise permit decision would have to wait until the next meeting, which is in the middle of UNC's spring break.

pay student fees until the Student Supreme Court hears the case. He said he doubted he would withdraw from UNC in protest, or to fight the case in civil court.

"I'm not going to do that because then I can't be a part of it," Poston said. "I can't fight from within then." Boulton said the payment of student fees was a prerequisite of class registration.

The Chapel Hill Eight is not protesting the CGLA's existence, Poston said. "We want people to realize that we're not persecuting the CGLA, or trying to define Christianity," he said. "We're condemning homosexuality as something we shouldn't have to pay fees for."

Poston said many students have jumped on the anti-CGLA bandwagon after the protest letter was sent. He said his phone has been "ringing off the hook" after a report about the letter appeared Tuesday.
