

New STV manager plans easier access

By MARK FOLK
Staff Writer

The STV Board of Directors recently elected Don Harris as STV's station manager for next year.

"I'm really excited about being elected and can't wait to begin my new job," Harris said. "Hopefully I can help STV continue to grow as it has in the past."

Harris said that although he plans to make changes to improve the station's accessibility, he wants to retain STV's basic organization.

"The basic organization of STV is great, and I hope to keep it that way," Harris said. "I just want to work to make STV more available to the students."

One of Harris' ideas is pushing for cable hook-ups in residence halls. He said this might allow STV to broadcast across campus.

"I plan to really push for the hook-up of cable in dorms," Harris said. "This would really open the door for STV."

Harris said he also plans to get more air time for shows, improve fund raising, produce more shows per week and consider obtaining academic credit for students who are active in STV.

Acquiring more equipment for the station is another goal, Harris said. "We are hampered now since we only own two cameras," he said.

"This summer I plan to put STV on all of the area stations' donating list for equipment."

The STV Board of Directors is a 17-member committee composed of faculty, staff, student leaders, and students who hold STV executive positions. Martin Clark, member of the committee and present STV station manager, said he feels the committee made the right decision.

"I'm really pleased by the committee's decision," Clark said. "Don has a lot of maturity, and he has had a great deal of experience in working with television."

Clark said he also hopes STV can become more accessible to students next year by establishing cable in residence halls.

"Some day I'd like to see STV become as accessible to students as the Daily Tar Heel is now, where someone can just turn on a TV set and watch it," he said. And Clark agreed that developing a way to bring in more equipment and money to STV would be beneficial.

"We haven't been able to find that one big fund raiser that raised a lot of money," Clark said. "I hope Don will somehow find a way to create money for STV."

Harris said he plans to get as many people as possible involved in STV next year. His main goals are to educate the students working with

Don Harris

STV about broadcasting and inform both students and faculty about what's going on around them.

"I want to make STV as fun, yet as educational as possible next year," Harris said. "Not only is STV a place for students to have a creative outlet, but it is also a way for students and faculty to keep up with what's happening."

Algebra contest on campus attracts young math whizzes

By ERIC BRADLEY
Staff Writer

College students aren't the only ones who have to endure competitive exams - 120 central North Carolina students, most of them barely 13 years old, came to UNC Wednesday to compete for the right to be considered the state's most promising junior and senior high school algebra students.

Each of the 38 participating schools could send its best four algebra students to the contest.

Stephen London, a seventh-grader from Grey Culbreth Junior High School in Chapel Hill, won first place. Along with the other 14 finalists, London will now go on to a semifinal state contest at Fayetteville State University.

"Everyone expected me to be first place," London, 13, said, filled with excitement after winning his football trophy. "Everyone else is in eighth and ninth grade, and I'm the only one in seventh grade, so they expected me to win," he said.

After the exam, London said he wasn't sure where he wanted to attend college, where he will probably have to sit through bigger and better exams.

"Most likely I'll go here," he said. The annual contest was sponsored by UNC's Center for Mathematics and Science Education, the College of Arts and Sciences and the School of Education.

"The contest encourages students to get involved in math," said Rebecca Sexton, director of the contest. "It keeps up an interest in math in high school students."

Coming to UNC to participate in an algebra contest is good for high school students, she said.

"I think there's a real benefit," she said. "I think it's good for them to see the campus and see what a university is like. Most of them have never seen a campus before."

And being a contest winner, of course, is even better than being a contest participant, she said.

"It shows them they are among the best math students in the state," she said. "It gives them a good head start."

Second place in the contest went to Christine Moritz, 12, of Phillips Junior High in Chapel Hill.

"I wasn't really expecting it," she said. But she was happy to win nonetheless, she said.

Third-place winner Jeff Huang, 14, from Culbreth, was also happy with his success. "Oh, I'm thrilled," he said.

Aside from individual winners, awards went to the top three schools. Tied for first place were Culbreth and Guy B. Phillips Junior High School, both of Chapel Hill; in second place was Western Middle School, of Elon College; and in third place was J.E. Holmes Junior High of Eden.

UNC student arrested after fight at Hector's

A UNC student was charged with assault Tuesday night after an incident at Hector's Restaurant on Franklin Street.

Ulysses Nicholas Kiousis, a 20-year-old from Point Harbor, N.C., was arrested after striking Matthew Stuart in the eye with his fist, said Chapel Hill Police Planner Keith Lohmann.

According to Chapel Hill police reports, Stuart had a large knot and cut above his right eye. The police called the South Orange County Rescue Squad, but Stuart was not taken to the hospital.

Stuart could not be reached for comment.

Paul Wiester, an employee at Hector's, said he was a witness to the fight, but he did not know why it started.

"The guys just started shouting at each other and calling each other names. One reached across the table and hit the other guy in the right eye," he said.

Wiester said he grabbed Kiousis after Kiousis swung a ketchup bottle at Stuart and missed, letting the bottle fall to the floor.

"After the fight, Stuart walked outside and Kiousis sat down inside until the police came," Wiester said. Kiousis said he had no comment.

Workshop to discuss traditions of black self-help

By KRISTEN GARDNER
Staff Writer

The eighth annual Black Experience Workshop, sponsored by the UNC School of Social Work, will be held in the Student Union March 19 and 20 to educate people about traditions of self-help within the black community.

"The Black Experience: Building on Self-Help Traditions" is open to the public as well as to social workers, Audrey E. Johnson, associate professor in the School of Social Work, said Wednesday.

"The purpose of the workshop is to educate people in general regarding the black experience," Johnson said. "There is a formal and informal system of self-help within the black community which currently operates to meet black needs."

But the help system alone is not adequate, Johnson said. "The public sector has never done enough to meet the needs of the black community," she said.

Cassandra Butts, chairwoman of Black Women United, said Wednesday that self-help has been historically significant in the black community.

The workshop will explore the history of self-help traditions and suggest ways that blacks can learn from these traditions and re-apply them, Butts said.

John Hope Franklin, a James B.

Duke professor emeritus at Duke University and author of ten books on black history, will be the keynote speaker for the event. Franklin will discuss "Values and Traditions in the Afro-American Community" during the event's opening session Friday at 9 a.m. in the Student Union Auditorium.

Other speakers for the event include Agnes D. Lattimer, medical director of Cook County Hospital in Chicago, Ill.; Darlene Clark Hine, professor of history at Purdue University; Benjamin Ruffin, director of public affairs for R.J. Reynolds-Nabisco; and Walter R. Allen, professor of sociology at the University of Michigan.

The programs will begin at 7:30 p.m. Thursday, with a discussion by Lattimer of self-help traditions in the black community.

Registration for the workshops will begin at 8 a.m. Friday.

Participants will choose two of the 12 workshops to be offered during the day. The closing session, "Reflections for the Future," will be held at 4:30 p.m.

Registration fee for the workshop is $30. Interested people should contact Audrey Johnson at the UNC School of Social Work for registration forms and for more information.

GO FROM COLLEGE TO THE ARMY WITHOUT MISSING A BEAT.

The hardest thing about breaking into professional music is - well, breaking into professional music. So if you're looking for an opportunity to turn your musical talent into a full-time performing career, take a good look at the Army.

It's not all parades and John Philip Sousa. Army bands rock, waltz and boogie as well as march, and they perform before concert audiences as well as spectators. With an average of 40 performances a month, there's also the opportunity for travel - not only across America, but possibly abroad.

Most important, you can expect a first-rate professional environment from your instructors, facilities and fellow musicians. The Army has educational programs that can help you pay for off-duty instruction, and if you qualify, even help you repay your federally-insured student loans. If you can sight-read music, performing in the Army could be your big break. Write: Chief, Army Bands Office, Fort Benjamin Harrison, IN 46216-5005. Or call toll free 1-800-USA-ARMY.
