

'Experts' may be wrong: Reid, South team should roll to gold

By STEPHEN GILES
Staff Writer

Some impressions from early action in men's basketball:

The "experts" from the media and the coaching staffs alike seem to have pegged the North to be the gold medal-bound outfit. Don't be so sure. Look for the South to upset the North in the finale.

Less talent, but better chemistry, more experience, and that "will to win."

With a backcourt consisting of high school All-Americans such as Jerome Harmon, Jay Edwards, Lyndon Jones, and Rumeal Robinson, the North can run the break and hit the perimeter shots. Add inside strength with 6-10, 235-pound Terry Mills and 6-6 Eric Manuel and the North has a balanced attack.

However, before the North can cash in on the gold, head coach Bob Nichols must mesh his young talent and get them to play as a team.

In early action, Michigan's

Mills was outstanding, especially in the North-East matchup on Saturday. In that game, Mills scored 18 points on 8-of-11 field goal shooting, grabbed 15 rebounds, blocked five shots, and even dished off three assists as the North won, 84-70.

Louisville's 6-4 guard Jerome Harmon, the slam-dunk champion at the BC Camps two consecutive years, has impressed with his leaping ability and the surprising range on his jump shot. In the first game, Harmon totaled only six points and four rebounds, but was solid nonetheless.

Rumeal Robinson found the early going tough. Like his Wolverine teammate Mills, Robinson was a Proposition 48 casualty last year. Robinson, a physical guard, managed only two points in the first game, but bounced back in the second game, recording 10 points to go along with six rebounds and two assists in a losing effort to the South.

The East team boasts the 1987 USA National High School Player of the Year, Dennis Scott, a 6-6, 215-pound consensus All-America forward. Add Duke-bound 6-5 forward Greg Koubek, a Parade Magazine and McDonald's All-American; 7-1, 240-pound Louisville product Felton Spencer; and 6-2 sharp-shooting guard Elander Lewis; and the East has the makings of a fine squad.

Still, East Head Coach Lefty Driesell found it difficult in the early going. After an opening round loss to the North squad, the East bounced back strong in their second outing. Behind an 18-point, six-rebound performance from Dennis Scott the East team defeated the West, 100-82. Spencer added 11 points and eight rebounds in the victory.

"Being successful in basketball depends on attitude. We felt we would play better with a game under our belt," Driesell noted. "In the second half we played very well, especially on defense."

On paper the West team seems to tower over its opponents. Dominating on the inside, right? Wrong! Early action has characterized the West as being too slender to bang with their opponents.

There is talent on the West team, however. USA Today All-American, Sean Higgins, a 6-7 Michigan-bound forward who is as good as they come. Add 6-11, 225-pound consensus All-American center LeRon Ellis and 6-10, 240-pound pivotman Sean Rooks and you quickly realize the West is not lacking in talent.

Head Coach Andy Russo blamed "poor shot selection and not working as a team" as the major problems his team has faced in its two defeats. "We need a more balanced attack with scoring from the outside as well as from the inside," Russo noted.

And now . . . the South. My prediction before the tournament had the South taking the gold. With consecutive victories in their first two games, head coach Eddie Sutton has his squad sitting pretty.

J.R. Reid heads the South team which includes fellow Tar Heels King Rice, a 5-11 McDonald's All-American point guard and forward Peter Chilcutt, a 6-8 redshirt freshman. On Sunday night, Sutton
