hundred spots for this purpose. Students with extenuating circumstances should contact Student Government in the fall to apply through the hardship process.

Students who try to park on campus without permits face stiff penalties. According to Mary Fox, UNC's parking control coordinator, about 500 citations for parking violations alone are issued on campus on an average day.

Penalties range from $10 for parking without the proper permit to $50 for unlawful transfer or display of a permit. Cars may also be towed for certain violations.

Parking on campus is not cheap, but compared to the town's prices it is a better bargain.

The cheapest monthly rental for a space from the town of Chapel Hill is $35 and the highest is $50. These spaces are in the lots on Rosemary Street. For further information contact Eric Luther, parking manager for Chapel Hill.

"Last year there were lots of spaces available, as you can imagine at that price," Clayton said. "That comes out to be around $300 for an academic

Another alternative for students would be a privately rented space. "We have heard there are people on Cameron Avenue who rent out spaces," Clayton said. "I've seen ads in the Independent and the DTH that spaces are being rented privately."

Of course, a final resource for getting to campus is the Chapel Hill Transit. Prices vary according to route and length of time. There are all-route tickets for $125 annually or 40-time tickets for $17.

Tickets specifically for the academic year are available. A person may designate a restricted route as well.

ces. A waiver would require a petition to the Appeals Committee, however, a procedure which has a reputation for being somewhat strict. Your best bet is probably to go ahead and take the course during your freshman year — and sink or swim.
