

Construction will begin in the fall on multi-million Alumni Center

Plans for the new UNC Alumni Center have been finalized and groundbreaking for the center is expected to occur this fall, said Karen Arwe, associate director for the UNC Alumni Center Campaign.

The center, which is expected to be completed in late fall of 1989, is being funded by the UNC Alumni Center Campaign. It will be located on a South Campus site near the Smith Center and the Kenan Institute for the Study of Private Enterprise.

The campaign's goal is $8.5 million, and $5.5 million in gifts and pledges have already been raised, Arwe said. Much of the $5.5 million came from special solicitations of members and past presidents of General Alumni Association (GAA) and members of the UNC Board of Trustees.

The remaining $3 million will be raised through area campaigns and solicitations of GAA members and donors of other major gifts. Area fund-raising campaigns have already been kicked off in Winston-Salem and Charlotte, and 8-10 more area campaigns will have been started by mid-fall, Arwe said.

One of the major reasons for building the center, Arwe said, is because of the General Alumni Association's need for expansion. "The General Alumni Association has a very definite need for space," she said.

Designed by O'Brien and Atkins of Durham, the center will be named in honor of George Watts Hill, who made a challenge gift of $3.5 million to the campaign. Hill was treasurer of GAA for 35 years.

The center will be a three-story, 43,000-square-foot-building, and will house rooms such as the alumni banquet hall and lounge, which will be used for special events and functions including reunion activities and private parties. Administration offices for the GAA, a boardroom, a student alumni association office, conference rooms, a guesthouse, a private dining room, a library and a room for memorabilia will also be located in the center.

"The Alumni Center will help us develop and broaden the range of programs we offer to alums, and give them a center of hospitality in Chapel Hill," Arwe said.

Health officials concerned about AIDS awareness

Although the AIDS epidemic continues to claim victims, college students seem to think they are not at risk of contracting the virus, some health experts say.

"Students are a bit too complacent (about AIDS)," said Dr. George Gallasso, a UNC graduate and chairman of the International Conference on AIDS that was held in Washington, D.C., in early June. "As the old saying goes, 'You don't only go to bed with the person you are with, but everyone else they slept with.'"

Kathy Kerr, a health educator for the N.C. AIDS Control Program, said, "When it comes to AIDS, students feel that they are immune." Any person who has had multiple sexual partners is in the risk category for AIDS, she said.

Sue Gray, director of health education at UNC's Student Health Service, suggested another reason why UNC students tend to ignore the AIDS epidemic.

"We're a politically conservative campus, and this is obviously not a conservative issue," Gray said.

Nevertheless, she said, students need to become educated about "safe sex" practices — not only to reduce their risk of contracting AIDS, but also to reduce the risk of contracting any other sexually transmitted diseases.

"All students need to be educated, regardless of sexual preference," she said.

According to Kerr and Gallasso, the best way to prevent contracting AIDS — or any other sexually transmitted disease — is to use condoms. "Condoms should become the norm, not the exception," Kerr said.

The Student Health Service works to educate students about AIDS and other sexually transmitted diseases through outreach programs in the residence halls, informational brochures, and the Contraceptive Health Education Clinic (CHEC), Gray said. Last semester, SHS disbursed condoms and handed out "safe sex" pamphlets during their campus Drug Awareness Week.
