

Ackland Art Museum to close for major renovation project

By KELLY RHODES
Staff Writer

The Ackland Art Museum will receive a $3.4 million facelift beginning Sept. 6, according to Ray Williams, Ackland director of education.

Part of the money for the renovation project will come from state appropriations, including funds allotted for asbestos removal.

The museum will be closed approximately 18 months, Williams said. During the renovation, the Ackland administrative offices will move to the newly renovated Wilson Library.

The old art library, classrooms and offices formerly used by the department of art in the 1960s and 1970s will become about 11,500 square feet of exhibition space, nearly doubling the area of the museum.

Major changes will include reorganizing gallery space in the east wing and the main area, improving storage space, adding new floor and wall coverings and replacing lighting and climate control systems.

Storage and study facilities will also be changed. Many of the 53 objects in the Museum's permanent collection are placed in storage year-round due to lack of exhibition floor space, according to Williams.

A special closing celebration at the museum Sunday will include a public reception from 1 to 5 p.m.

Ackland docents will be giving free tours of the museum every hour on the hour. Selections of paintings and sculpture from the permanent collection are currently exhibited in the main gallery. In the Facets gallery, sculpture and paintings from India representing literary themes, scenes of daily life, portraits and Hindu deities are on display.

After a breakup, Fetchin Bones recovers

By JAMES BURRUS
Staff Writer

Fetchin Bones, the Charlotte band that was so broken six months ago that it looked like it would never walk again, is back on its feet again. The band is back to playing their great rip-roaring live shows and are also recording a new album.

The new Fetchin Bones will be appearing tomorrow night at He's Not Here.

The band is days away from finishing "Galaxy 500," on Capitol. Don Dixon is producing once again.

The album should be out this fall, but there is a possibility it could come out as late as January, said Hope Nicholls, lead vocalist.

The band is playing several of the new songs, such as "The Stray," rocking as hard as ever.

Joining the band are Clay Richardson on lead guitar and Errol Stewart on drums. Richardson studied at the Berkley School of Music in Boston for a few years and was in another Charlotte band when he decided to join Fetchin Bones.

Errol, who attended Western Carolina University for a while, has known Nicholls, Pitkin, and Pentes for over a decade.

"He found out there were problems in our band, and he started learning all the old songs off the old records," Nicholls said.

Gone from the band are Gary White, lead guitar, and Marc Mueller, drums.

"There were two different kinds of groups in the band that were going in two different directions,"

Nicholls said. "It's better that there are two bands where there once was one."

White and Mueller have now formed their own band, The Yokies.

The Bones breakup last winter certainly disappointed a lot of music fans. Their second LP, "Bad Pumpkin," was receiving rave reviews from critics as well as picking up new listeners. The band also opened for part of R.E.M.'s last tour.

Don't fret though. The current Fetchin Bones lineup can still put their audiences against the ropes and flail away unmercifully.

Fetchin Bones will perform tomorrow at He's Not Here. Call 942-7939 for more information.

Carolina Athletic Association plans ticket distribution changes

By HELEN JONES
Staff Writer

A new plan for basketball ticket distribution, an improved informational booklet and a new spirit committee and mascot head this fall's list of changes for the Carolina Athletic Association (CAA).

CAA president Carol Geer also has several other projects in the works, including a new parcourse fitness trail, better hours for students at Koury Natatorium and improvements for Woollen Gym's weight rooms.

Basketball tickets will be randomly distributed Sundays from 6 p.m. to 9 p.m. and Mondays from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Geer hopes the Sunday distribution will be convenient because it doesn't conflict with classes. Also, she said students will be able to go away for the weekend and still get tickets.

The Carolina Fever Committee, a group designed to stimulate school spirit, is one of the CAA's most ambitious projects. About 150 students have joined so far, but organizers are still looking for more people.

Planned activities include holding pep rallies before each home football game, manning a "Fever Booth" outside the stadium and sitting in a designated stadium section beside the band.

"We want to be loud," Geer said. "We want the football players to know that we're back there."

Along with 10,000 pompons for each home game and pre-game pep rallies, a new mascot will make his debut at the Auburn game. The new mascot will be a person dressed up in a ram suit, but for the sake of tradition, the authentic ram will still appear.

Also, Geer is proud of the improved edition of "Sports Outlook," a booklet about the athletic pursuits available at UNC that is distributed to freshmen and junior transfers. It includes information about intramural and recreational teams as well as club and varsity sports.

In place of the previous newspaper format, this year's "Sports Outlook" is bound in booklet form with brief explanations for each club and varsity sport. It also has information on ticket distribution and a description of IM-REC facilities and their hours.

Construction for the new parcourse fitness trail, an 18-station loop to be centered around Kenan Stadium, is scheduled to begin in two to three weeks.

Along a path about one and a half miles long, each station will have a sign illustrating a different type of exercise.

The CAA will also work to get more convenient student swimming hours at Koury Natatorium, on South Campus by the Smith Center. Last year's hours, from noon to 2 p.m., proved unpopular because they often conflicted with classes.

"We don't want to infringe on the swim team," Geer said, "but when they're not there, the students have a right to it."

Finally, Geer has plans to improve the weight rooms in Woollen Gym. She wants to make repairs, update equipment and allow more student time on the Nautilus machines.
