

University-Town Committee issues preliminary report

By WILL LINGO
Staff Writer

Chapel Hill and UNC should not make any major road changes until they have examined other ways to resolve the town's growing traffic problems, according to a preliminary report issued by a joint University-Town Committee.

"An emphasis on park-and-ride bus lots and limiting traffic growth in town are two of the more important points of the report," said committee member John Sanders.

The report recommends slowing traffic growth by encouraging walking, bicycling and carpooling.

The joint committee was formed in July by Mayor James Wallace and Chancellor Christopher Fordham in reaction to public opposition to the UNC land-use plan. The committee's purpose was to propose possible alternatives to the plan and make recommendations to the mayor and the chancellor.

The campus loop road proposed by the University plan should not run through Battle Park or any surrounding neighborhoods, according to the report. The report further recommends that a campus loop road should take no private property.

Instead, the committee proposed a major north-south thoroughfare on the east side of campus that would begin at the east end of Hinton-James and run north through one-quarter mile of woods, intersecting with Ridge Road north of Boshamer Stadium.

Pittsboro Street should not be widened past the present state-owned right-of-way and South Columbia Street should remain open to vehicle traffic, according to the report. The University's plan had proposed closing part of South Columbia Street and widening Pittsboro Street to up to six lanes.

The report also recommends that before the University closes Cameron Street to vehicle traffic, it should study the possible effects.

The committee met 11 times before issuing the preliminary report. Members will present the report at a public hearing on Dec. 8, and then decide on a final draft. The final draft will be presented to the chancellor and the mayor.

Despite all the actions of the committee, the recommendations they make in the report will only serve as advice, Sanders said. None of the recommendations is binding, and the course of action taken after the release of the final report will depend on what people think of the proposals, he said.

The committee's biggest accomplishment was taking the assignment given by the mayor and the chancellor and did the job, he said.

Celebrating buddy-hood at Christmas time

Children's shouts and laughter rang throughout the Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity house Thursday afternoon during the Big Buddy/Little Buddy Christmas party.

The Big Buddy program, sponsored by the Campus Y, allows students to adopt an area elementary school-aged child as a Little Buddy for a year. The buddies spend time together each week.

In the basement of the fraternity house, children were making Christmas cards, stringing and eating popcorn, bursting balloons with darts for candy and playing pinball.

Upstairs, the Little Buddies had a chance to visit with Santa Claus, watch classic Christmas cartoons and sing carols. Some fierce football, basketball and soccer games took place outside.

The University students seemed to be having as much fun as their Little Buddies. Junior Mary Fonville of Raleigh looked up from a Christmas card she was helping 11-year-old Latisha Atwater make and said, "This is a good excuse for me to play. I enjoy it as much as she does." Latisha added that she has enjoyed riding bikes, going to an arcade and shopping with her Big Buddy this year.

9-year-old Omar Bynum and his

Big Buddy, Paul Foreman, a junior from Elizabeth City, met only about a week ago, but Omar already seemed enthusiastic about his new friend. "I like him because he's fun. We just have fun," he said as he concentrated on his pinball game.

Lashantina Cole, 10, and Alesha Foushee, 9, were intent on decorating their Christmas cards with popcorn and cranberries. They listed roller skating, ice skating and eating ice cream as some of their favorite things to do with their Big Buddies. Lashantina's Big Buddy, Kathy Morgan, a junior from Greensboro, said her favorite experience while working with the program has been "meeting

Lashantina."

Bill Lancaster, a junior from Warnerville, N.Y., brought 10-year-old Calvin Farrington to the party and was trying to help his Little Buddy decide which activity to begin on. He said he and Calvin enjoy "playing" with computers, bowling, playing football and going to Bugs Bunny movies together. "I enjoy spending time with Calvin. He makes me laugh," Lancaster said. At that moment, Calvin heard that Santa Claus was upstairs and took off, dragging his Big Buddy with him.

Applications for participation in the Big Buddy program are available at the Campus Y.

Law, medical schools appoint new deans

By GUINEVERE ROSS

Law and medical school officials have announced the appointment of two new deans.

Ronald Link has been named acting dean of the School of Law, and Dr. Cheryl McCartney has been appointed associate dean for student affairs in the School of Medicine.

The law school appointed Link after the resignation of present Dean Kenneth Broun, who is taking a two-year leave of absence to practice law in Raleigh with Petree, Stockton and Robinson.

The search for a permanent dean, which began last spring, may end July 1, said Judith Wegner, an associate professor in the law school.

Link will deal with routine matters such as personnel decisions and budget matters until the new dean comes on board, Wegner said.

Link is a former associate dean of the law school and belongs to the American Bar Association, the N.C. Bar Association and the Illinois Bar Association. He received his bachelor's and law degrees from the University of Illinois and earned a master's degree from the University of California at Berkeley.

McCartney, formerly acting director of the psychiatry department's consult-liaison service, will replace Dr. Mitchell Sorrow, who worked for student affairs in the School of Medicine for 17 years, said Dr. Stuart Bondurant, dean of the School of Medicine.

McCartney, who will take over as associate dean on Nov. 1, said she works with "any programs that are involved with making the medical students comfortable," including orientation programs for new medical students, counseling services and academic advising.

"A large part of the job is to help them (medical students) make decisions about which specialty of medicine to go into, and which residency programs are best for their specialty," she said.

The Minneapolis native attended Northwestern University, where she received her bachelor's degree in 1969 and her medical degree in 1971. She completed her residency in psychiatry at UNC.

McCartney joined the medical school faculty in 1980 as a specialist in the psychological aspects of gynecologic cancer and infertility. She is also an adjunct associate professor in the Department of Obstetrics and Gynecology.

In 1982 McCartney became the first psychiatrist to receive the American Cancer Society's Junior Faculty Clinical Fellowship grant. A year later, she received Best Teacher Awards from first and third-year psychiatry residents at UNC.

A member of the clinical cancer committees at North Carolina Memorial Hospital, she has served on the medical school's student appeals committee. She also serves as vice president of the N.C. Psychiatric Association and is a member of the state Department of Human Resources Task Force on AIDS.

"Future generations will be fortunate to have McCartney in that position because of her commitment to students," Bondurant said.
