Gov. Martin

Martin, Jordan state platforms in debate

By STACI COX
Staff Writer

N.C. Gov. Jim Martin, a Republican, and Democratic Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan squared off at the Carolina Inn Friday in their first gubernatorial debate, sponsored by the N.C. Press Association (NCPA).

In an opening statement, Martin called for gubernatorial veto power, and highlighted his plans to improve roads, schools and prisons if he is elected to a second term.

Both candidates promised a "clean" electoral race.

Jordan attacked Martin's record during his first term, calling him a "sitting governor" who cannot work effectively with the N.C. General Assembly, the state's heavily Democratic legislature.

But Martin stressed his accomplishments with the General Assembly, citing improvements in the prison and education systems that resulted from bipartisan support.

Martin also took a few jabs at the General Assembly, accusing legislators of using "intimidation and secret sessions" for political reasons.

"I think people have to recognize that there are times you have to work together," Martin said, "but there are also times when it's important to reveal, to disclose, to point out some of the flaws of the way in which the General Assembly does business."

Several of Jordan's proposals did not get a warm reception from General Assembly members, said Tim Funk, political reporter for The Charlotte Observer and one of three journalists who formed a panel for the debate.

But Jordan said he had a better working relationship with the legislature than Martin and would accomplish more as Governor.

"In 1957 I went to a business (Jordan Lumber Company) that had 13 employees, part Democrats, part Republicans," Jordan said. "Now that business creates over 250 jobs — a lot of Republicans, a lot of Democrats. I've done it by working with people."

If elected, Jordan said he would recruit more jobs for North Carolinians by replacing the N.C. Chamber of Commerce with the N.C. Economic Development Corporation, a group of business professionals from across the state.

"We need to do things a different way," Jordan said. "We need to look at financial structure, just exactly how we can help small businesses grow, medium-sized businesses grow, like Jordan Lumber Company."

Calling Jordan's proposal "ridiculous," Martin said the N.C. Chamber of Commerce should not be disbanded because its business policies were favorable to the state.

Martin accused Democrats of sabotaging his proposed 1984 tax cuts, saying that former Gov. Jim Hunt left a budget with no room for the tax cuts Martin promised in his 1984 campaign. North Carolina's economy could absorb tax cuts since its revenues are continually growing, Martin said. Tax cuts would reduce revenue growth by about 25 percent, but they would not affect current revenues.

Martin also criticized the Democratic General Assembly for dealing unfairly with the issue of toxic-waste sites in North Carolina. The General Assembly passed waste-dilution requirements that killed North Carolina's chance of getting waste-treatment facilities, Martin said.

"We have to place these facilities somewhere," Martin said. "Modern society requires that we generate the waste, and we ought to be prepared to take our turn and do our job in respect to properly handling, treating and recycling... toxic waste."

Heels keep Wolves at bay, 77-73

By CHRIS SPENCER
Assistant Sports Editor

RALEIGH — They closed the North Carolina Zoological Park Sunday.

Someone must have, because all of the animals were in Reynolds Coliseum, cheering for the N.C. State Wolfpack and jeering the North Carolina Tar Heels in front of a national television audience.

But try as they might, the 20th-ranked Wolfpack faithful couldn't rattle the second-ranked Tar Heels, who escaped the cramped, barn-like structure with a physical 77-73 victory.

The win, coming after a tough 70-69 loss last Thursday to ninth-ranked Duke, gave the Tar Heels a 14-2 record overall, 3-1 in the ACC. State fell to 10-4, 2-2.

As in Thursday's loss, North Carolina found themselves in a situation where sophomore center J.R. Reid was heavily guarded and junior guard Jeff Lebo largely ineffective offensively, this time due to a bad knee.

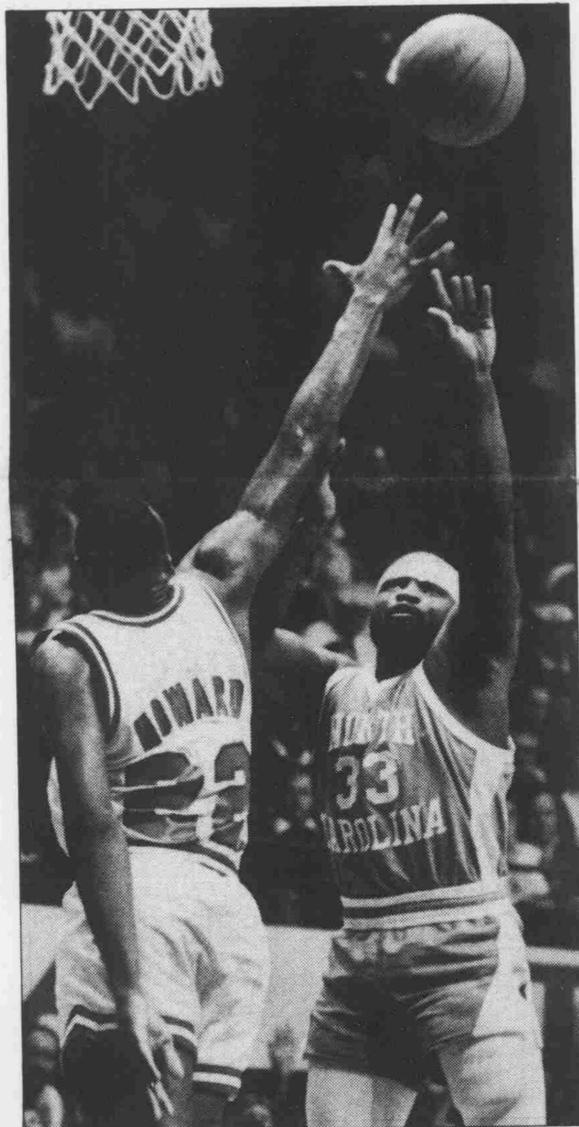

But unlike Thursday, other Tar Heels picked up the slack, with sophomore Scott Williams scoring 10 points and redshirt freshman Pete Chilcutt and junior Steve Bucknall adding eight.

Add to that a stellar performance from redshirt sophomore Kevin Madden, who finished with 16 points on 7-of-8 shooting and hauled in six rebounds.

With the crowd of 12,400 at a fever pitch from the opening tip, the two teams traded baskets early on, with Madden hitting for six straight points in one stretch to give the Tar Heels a 16-15 lead.

After Reid, who still finished with 17 points, hit two straight shots in the lane, the second a three-point play, Chilcutt worked off two Lebo feeds for a basket and two free throws and one from King Rice for another

Faculty proposes athletics committee

By JACKIE DOUGLAS
Staff Writer

Faculty members introduced a resolution calling for the establishment of an ad hoc faculty committee to examine the role of intercollegiate athletics at UNC at Friday's Faculty Council meeting.

The resolution, introduced by William Smith, a mathematics professor, will be placed on the agenda for the council's next meeting in February.

The resolution was written by a group of faculty members who met informally over the past month due to concern about former football coach Dick Crum's resignation and the controversy that surrounded it.

If the resolution is approved by the council, the committee would consist of the present faculty chairman and five former faculty chairmen, as well as the present advisory committee chairman and three former committee chairmen.

According to the resolution, the committee would carry out an extensive study of all aspects of the intercollegiate athletics program at UNC, including procedures, financing and the department's relationship with the Educational Foundation (also known as the Rams Club).

Committee members would then report their findings to the faculty and note any activities within the department that conflict with the University standards of conduct. The committee would also make recommendations to improve the athletic program.

The committee would report to the faculty during the course of the study, and issue the final report in March 1989.

Chancellor Christopher Fordham said he thought the resolution was in the University's best interests.

"I shall not oppose the resolution," he said. "I believe it is a very positive step in improving the athletic program at this university."

Smith, who said he is optimistic that the council will approve the resolution, said faculty supervision would prevent a situation similar to the Crum controversy from happening again.

"This resolution would carry out a study that would make sure the intercollegiate athletic program had the proper priorities and carried out its affairs in the proper manner," Smith said.

Smith also said that time will tell to what extent the University's reputation was affected by the Crum scandal.

Also discussed at the meeting was the recent criticism concerning the

Housing director announces guaranteed housing policy

By JENNY CLONINGER
Staff Writer

All UNC students who are unsuccessful in the residence hall lottery are guaranteed on-campus housing if they are willing to live on South Campus, according to Wayne Kuncl, director of housing.

Students who do not get an assignment to their requested dormitory now have two choices. They may either stay on the waiting list to return to their dorm, or they can request a room in a South Campus highrise (Ehringhaus, Morrison or Hinton James).

Students who choose to request a South Campus room are guaranteed a space, Kuncl said.

The addition of Carmichael Residence Hall, as well as the increased number of off-campus housing options, has decreased the number of students waiting for on-campus housing, Kuncl said. The housing department now has more spaces and is able to offer this option.

Kelly Clark, Residence Hall Association president, said the housing shortage is caused by too many students wanting to live on North Campus.

"It's not that there aren't enough spaces on campus," he said. "There are plenty of rooms, but too many people want to get into dorms where there isn't enough room."

Even though students might not be assigned to the room or hall they want, the new option will relieve them of the anxiety of waiting all summer to find out whether they have a space on campus, Clark said.

Kuncl said students who have been forced to live off campus because of the housing shortage may be able to find an on-campus room, if they're willing to live in a South Campus residence hall.

Housing application procedures begin on Monday, Jan. 25. The 1988-89 housing contract and application booklets will then be available to students in Area Directors' offices and in the Housing Contracts Office

Zellmer in the running for president of RHA

By BARBARA LINN
Staff Writer

Paula Zellmer, a junior business major from Winston-Salem, has announced her candidacy for Residence Hall Association president.

Zellmer said she wants to increase the cohesiveness and interaction within the residence hall governments by defining government positions more clearly and having the different area governments meet and plan together.

"Hall reps, dorm reps and social reps don't even know they're part of RHA," she said. "It's hard to be the best at your job if you don't know what your job is."

Zellmer said everybody involved in dorm government should meet with each other at the beginning of the year so members know about the organization and realize what they can do.

"With the way RHA works now, when something happens that affects 6,500 students on campus, 15 people are left to address the issues," she said.

Zellmer said she wants to overcome student apathy and get more students involved in RHA by making involvement more enjoyable.

RHA should work on internal issues, such as programming in the residence halls, South Campus outreach, security and summer storage, she said.

Zellmer said RHA should also work more closely with Student Government's South Campus outreach committee.

She also said she wants to organize a summer committee to investigate police files and find out where break-ins and rapes happen most frequently.

"The results would be compiled and given to students so they know what they can do to prevent these things from happening to them," she said. Zellmer served as co-president of Aycok Residence Hall and is an executive assistant to the RHA president. She has served as chairwoman of several investigative committees, including the guaranteed student/sophomore housing committee.

Martin begins campaign for student body president

By JUSTIN MCGUIRE
Senior Writer

Kevin Martin, a junior economics and political science major from Charlotte, has announced his candidacy for student body president.

Increasing communication between the administration and the students is the primary role of the student body president, Martin said. "I think the president bridges the gap between students and administration," Martin said.

Martin said he wants to establish a cooperative education program that would allow a student to go to school part-time, while working part-time in a field relevant to his major.

Students in the program could also attend school for a semester and then work for a semester, Martin said.

"This program would open doors to students with financial difficulty (by letting them earn money)," Martin said. "And it would bring back practical experience to the classroom."

The University should set minimum standards of English fluency for foreign teaching assistants in the subjects they teach, Martin said, because students have trouble understanding them.

Martin said he wants to establish an administrative position in charge of minority affairs. This position would deal with problems such as recruitment and retention of minority students, he said.

Martin also said he is interested in forming a student advisory committee. The committee would consist of student leaders elected in the campus-wide election, as well as other students elected by the committee.

"It (the committee) would advise the administration by vocalizing student concerns," Martin said. "And it would develop a working relationship between not only the students and the administration but between the student leaders themselves."

Martin is a presidential aide to Student Body President Brian Bailey. He is also vice chairman of the Honor Court and has served as a member of the court.
