

Professors, Spangler meet to address faculty concerns

By LYNNE McCLINTOCK

About 22 members of the N.C. Association of American University Professors (AAUP) met with UNC-system President C.D. Spangler on Friday to discuss faculty concerns, including the new UNC-system drug policy and former head football coach Dick Crum's resignation.

The AAUP was created in the early 1950s to give faculty members an outlet to voice their concerns. About 120 professors are members of the N.C. AAUP.

Caroline Becker, an AAUP member and UNC-CH professor, said the faculty expressed concern that the new drug policy, adopted Dec. 4 by the Board of Governors, did not stress the need to educate faculty members of the policy.

"Education should be the major thrust, not the action," she said.

The new drug policy stresses the punitive actions that will be taken against teachers involved with drugs, Becker said. The most severe action is firing.

William Schneider, N.C. AAUP president and UNC-Wilmington professor, said, "Crum was spoken of generally."

Schneider said Spangler informed the professors at the meeting that UNC-H had set up several committees to look into the incident.

The AAUP will sponsor a meeting at Wake Forest University, March 18-19, to discuss intercollegiate athletics and university affairs.

Philip Carson, chairman of the Board of Governors, will be the guest speaker.

Other issues discussed included:

- sick leave. Spangler said a formal maternity leave policy could be restrictive, so the present lack of a policy is the most beneficial.

- freedom of speech on non-university issues. Specifically discussed was an N.C. State University professor, Denis Woods, who used his title in a letter criticizing plans for Centennial Campus.
- the proper handling of grievances. Becker said the grievance procedure needed to be more operative.
- the integrity of the university. Becker said, "We expressed our confidences in the university and our hopes that it would continue to flourish."

The UNC-system president meets with the N.C. AAUP twice a year.

Spangler said, "The professors are part of a group who meet periodically with the president, and they talk informally about problems on their campuses."

Parking prices on the rise

Permit revenues will cover cost of parking deck

By KATIE BECK

Next year's parking permit rates will increase due to the need for funding the proposed parking deck near Craige Residence Hall, transportation officials said Monday.

John Gardner, transportation planner for the department of transportation and parking services, said the need for extra revenues stems from the lack of funding from other departments within the University.

"I can't tell you what to expect," he said.

Gardner said the permit prices must be raised considerably to cover the cost of the parking deck.

"I won't tell you by what percentage the permit revenues would have to be raised in order to cover the entire cost of the parking deck," he said. "But I will tell you it would be pretty high."

Gardner indicated there would be some increase in next year's parking prices, "unless some benevolent soul decides to donate $6 or $8 million to have their name on the side of a parking deck."

Brian Sipe, student member of the Traffic and Parking Advisory Committee, said the Craige parking deck could raise permit prices as much as $125.

"Students won't be able to use it because once it's built, parking permits will be $350-$400, and no student will be able to afford it," Sipe said.

The 10,500 parking spaces now range in price from $10-$240.

Sipe said the Craige deck is a $12.2

million project, and the traffic department has developed a budget without alternative funding.

"Student feeling is that alternative funding needs to be found," he said. "The Rams Club needs to pitch in, among others."

Other possibilities for raising the funds, as well as the potential parking permit increase, will be discussed at the next Traffic and Parking Advisory Committee meeting on Thursday.

Amounts of the price increases will be settled in late February when the committee meets with the Board of Trustees.

Students and faculty may notice a shortage of parking spaces next year when 400 spaces are cut due to upcoming construction.

Pizza delivery man attacked, robbed

A Domino's pizza delivery man was robbed Saturday night outside the Tar Heel Motel, according to police reports.

After delivering a pizza to a room at the Tar Heel Motel, Carl Bradley was assaulted by two young black males and robbed of $30, police said.

One of the youths was carrying a wrench, police said.

The delivery man was not injured in the attack, which occurred at about 9:15 p.m., said Jane Cousins, Chapel Hill police planner.

Cousins said Bradley described the youths as being between 17 and 19 years old and of medium height and build.

No connections have been made to the Jan. 21 armed robbery of another Domino's delivery person in Carrboro, Cousins said. In that incident, the pizza deliverer went to an empty apartment and was robbed of his wallet and the pizza at gunpoint.

Domino's officials declined to comment about the Carrboro robbery.

Dave Myers, Domino's regional supervisor for Durham and Chapel Hill, said the pizza chain does take precautions against robberies. Domino's requires delivery people to return to the store after two deliveries and deposit the money they collected, Myers said.

Chancellor quality of faculty, the report said.

The fringe benefits UNC provides its faculty have declined significantly in recent years, and faculty and staff salaries are not high enough compared to other research universities of similar quality, the report said.

Additional funding is desperately needed and is essential to UNC, the report said, and the next chancellor should address this issue immediately. Faculty recruitment, competitive salaries, maintenance, supplies and equipment, educational technology, library funding and undergraduate faculty all depend greatly on a steady flow of funds, the report said.

The report said that the University should undertake an immediate and extensive private fund campaign to provide a solution to this problem, and try to match the amount of funds granted to the University by the state. The University should take funds from overhead receipts from federal grants to provide funds for basic operating expenses, the report said.

Officials should consider a significant tuition increase for both in- and out-of-state students to provide more funds, the report said.

To deal with the conflict between the governing bodies of UNC, the Board of Trustees, the Board of Governors and the UNC-system president should meet to deal with problems that have traditionally been difficult for the chancellor.

"It is imperative that these issues be resolved or be on the road to resolution before the next chancellor is appointed," the report said.

According to the report, the president should also develop an internal method of reviewing the chancellor's performance every 3-5 years.

The Chancellor Search Committee must search aggressively for chancellor candidates from all quarters, the report said.
