Ever since the stores took down their Christmas decorations and the after-Christmas sales finally ended, the next holiday burst upon consumers — Valentine's Day. It's profit heaven for the greeting cards industry. So, the graffiti of the week will seasonably concentrate on some of the more interesting ways to say "I love you." Or at least something close to that.

Some express their wooing words in poetry.

"All I know of love is that love is all there is." — Emily Dickinson

"Love reckons hours for months, and days for years and every little absence is an age." — John Dryden

"When it comes to love I always say much less than I mean and mean much more than I say."

"There is only one happiness in life — to love and be loved." — George Sand

Others would rather be witty on this sentimental day.

A Jack Larson cartoon: a man and a woman, seated at a table, sip wine. Under the table, we can see the man's shoes, which are adorned with fruit, horns and bunny rabbits. The woman says, "I judge a man by the shoes he wears. . . I like your shoes."

A Richard Stine cartoon, depicting a man and a woman joined by a door latch which is bolted to their bodies, says, "I'm hooked on you."

A complacent cat with a bird perched on its head says, "You're always on my mind."

A photo of a baby, clasping her hands and looking gleefully at a lazy camel, says "Can we talk?"

One orangutan, while chewing a stick, says to his female friend, "We could make a great team."

And, of course, there are also the enduring staples of the Valentines, which say:

"I love you — Happy Valentine's Day."

"Be my Valentine."

"You're beautiful . . . And you're mine."

And, unfortunately, there are the cutesy cards.

A clown, holding helium balloons and wearing a pouch bag full of colored stars, says, "I'm in the air collecting stars for you."

A purple cow wearing blue glasses illustrates that "love is blind."

One card, picturing a red heart going over the horizon, says "My heart is set on you."

A piece of pizza with hearts for pepperoni decorates another card, which says, "You've got a pizza my heart."

You know St. Valentine has gotta hate that.

Oh, the Temptations!

The Start of Something Big

Zesty. Tasty. And oh, so good going down. Our appetizers are a snappy snack, a light lunch, or the terrific start of a terrific meal. So go ahead, give in to temptation.
