

A Key Lime stream of consciousness

Authentic Key Lime Pie is not green but yellow. Limes grow badly (and yellow) in the Keys; scrub trees produce unmarketable fruits. Key dwellers make do and make pies.

Making do with soft drinks in plastic bottles instead of cans saves an incredible amount of money. A six-pack of 12 oz. cans costs about 4 cents per ounce, while a six-pack of 16 oz. plastic bottles costs about 2 cents per ounce.

Plastic surgery in its mildest form is ear piercing.

Igor Stravinsky's ballet "Le Sacre du Printemps" is profound cacophony. To some it is ear piercing. Primitive rhythms drive the sacrificial maiden to dance herself to death in a pagan spring ritual. At the work's premiere, Parisians rioted. They didn't know genius when they heard it.

Our pagan spring rituals don't generally cause riots, just town council meetings. All we want to do is dance (and drink) out at Pi Kappa Phi. Stravinsky has nothing to do with it. I just don't see the problem.

I do see a problem, however, with waiting for Godot, something we all seem to be doing when we're not taking part in pagan spring rituals. The cold truth is that Godot may never show up at all, or he may be a balding Bon Jovi fan with absolutely nothing to say.

Like John Cage. He wrote "I have nothing to say, and I say it." So instead he composed a piece for 12 radios. (Each radio is played by two people, one controlling volume and the other controlling frequency according to the musical score. Whatever sounds emit from the contraptions are the music Cage envisions.)

Randomness is a virtue. Everything has a hidden connection to everything that the mind may see without being conscious of it.

But why is wholesomeness a virtue? Having the "simple health or vigor of normal domesticity" is nothing to stop the presses for. Wholesome family entertainment most likely has no redeeming artistic value, or else the entertainment in question would be advertised for these qualities rather than for its wholesomeness. Much of what is billed as wholesome family entertainment is worthless nonsense.

Like Pat Robertson. What has the man got going for him besides being fairly wholesome family entertainment? Anyone who advocates higher birth rates in order to save Social Security dwells under a rock. He also opposes child care by anyone but the mother. Barefoot, pregnant, and in the kitchen is not a good way to be, Pat.

Well, actually, barefoot can be pretty good, if you are in the Keys in the sun with a Jimmy Buffett tape and a lime daiquiri, a frothy frosty drink which could be a light shade of green.

However, authentic Key Lime Pie is not green but yellow.
