

School sponsors workshop to examine black issues

By JAMES BENTON
Staff Writer

Conditions and challenges facing the black community will be the focus of the Ninth Annual Black Experience Workshop Thursday and Friday, sponsored by the UNC School of Social Work.

This year's workshop is important because recent events have proven that blacks still face a long road ahead, said Audrey Johnson, an associate professor in the School of Social Work.

"Some things that are happening today help show us that we (blacks) are not really progressing . . . and that racism is not gone yet," Johnson said.

Johnson cited the large number of racial incidents that have taken place in this decade as evidence that racism is not a thing of the past.

"There have been over 2,900 racially motivated crimes in this country since 1980," Johnson said. "And not all of them have been done by people in white sheets."

The workshop will begin tonight with an open forum. "The Black Experience: A Lifetime of Contemporary Conditions and Challenges," at 7 p.m. in the Hanes Art Center Auditorium. The forum will feature Etta Moten, an actress who has appeared in movies and plays.

The workshop will continue Friday with registration and the opening session in the Union Auditorium from 8 to 10:30 a.m. A series of seminars will take place following the opening session.

The seminars will address issues facing blacks today, such as politics, affirmative action, health and social needs, outreach to elderly blacks and the importance of researching conditions in the black community.

After the individual seminars, the workshop will conclude with a closing session, "Reflections for Today and Tomorrow," in the Union Auditorium at 4:30 p.m.

Speakers for the workshop include professor Andrew Billingsley, chairman of the Department of Family and Community Development at the University of Maryland; N.C. state representative Dan Blue, chairman of the North Carolina Black Caucus; Samuel Johnston of the Bureau of the Census; Delores Parron, associate director for special populations from the National Institute of Mental Health; and Fred McRae, founder of the AIDS Awareness in the Black Community Project in Wilmington.

The idea for the workshop came about in 1979, when the school's dean suggested the school sponsor programs to provide information for faculty, students and the community in general about issues in the black community, Johnson said. The first workshop was held in 1980.

Johnson said attendance for the workshop averages 350-400, with a good deal of support coming from the community. Johnson said she hopes the workshop will promote awareness of the problems blacks face by encouraging communication and the flow of information.

"We need to get people communicating, and that's not happening," Johnson said. "We hope to overcome ignorance through communication about the issues."

Participants may register Friday morning before the seminars for $30. The registration fee for students and senior citizens is $15.

Club lowers membership fee to attract student clientele

By JAMES BURRUS

One of the best-kept secrets in Chapel Hill is finally being discovered.

The Morocco Club, three footsteps behind Cat's Cradle, is opening its doors to the general public for the first time and aiming to increase its number of college-age members.

The club has catered to the 25- to 35-year-old crowd in the past, said Chris Smoak, one of the owners of the club. By decreasing annual memberships from $30 to $5 Smoak hopes to attract more college students to the club.

Some students have already purchased memberships.

"It's quiet and not crowded," said Chris Riley, a junior from Winston-Salem. "We can get away from the rush of the bar scene. There's not a lot of drunk people here."

Greg Jarvis agrees.

"It's a good place to kind of wind down the evening," said Jarvis, a recent UNC graduate also from Winston-Salem.

The Morocco Club is a small two-story bar that offers shuffleboard (the only one in town), pool facilities and serves beer as well as wine, ale and mixed drinks. Unlike the Cradle, the Club does not allow people under 21 through its doors. The club got its name from its previous owners. They bought draperies, wall ornaments and other souvenirs from Morocco and used them to decorate the club.

Smoak compares his club to the television bar Cheers because of the club's clientele.

"The people that have been coming here basically know each other," he said. "It's also a good place for women to come and not be hit on. It's not a meat market."

The membership roll totals 275 people, but Smoak says only about half of those members are regulars.

Some club-goers to Cat's Cradle come back to the Morocco club between bands to get a drink. A lot of the bands that play the Cradle also use the Morocco Club. Smoak allows the band members to dress and shower in one of the upstairs rooms. In exchange, Morocco members get $1 off the cover charge for shows at the Cradle.

"The Morocco is the type of place where you can come and relax," said Billy Johnson, longtime resident shuffleboard champion and manager of Cat's Cradle. "You can come back here, have a drink, relax and just get away from everything. There's not another bar like this in Chapel Hill."

for North Carolina include the improvement of state parks and coastal development issues, he said.

Because of the erosion of some of the state's beaches, many owners of beachfront property want the construction of sea walls, Holman said, but North Carolina has a policy prohibiting such building.

But development across the state is "gobbling up those things that make North Carolina a special, unique state," he said, and the state is doing very little to protect recreational land.

The state also fell short in the super collider program, a research program that will study the breakdown of subatomic particles, he said. North Carolina is one of seven states in contention for the project.

"The super collider is a good example of a state-run screw-up," he said.

Despite the fact that the state has long worked to attract the program, which could cost the state up to $500 million, citizens' and environmental groups were not informed of the state's plans until last fall, Holman said.

But conservation groups and citizens can have an impact on legislation and win important environmental wars, he said.

"Watching the (Gov. Jim) Martin administration scramble as the situation deteriorates by the day, it has been very tempting not to say 'I told you so,'" he said.

Holman's speech was sponsored by the Campus Y Student Environmental Action Coalition.

the house. The repairs cost $4,000 to $5,000 and took only a matter of weeks to complete, he said.

Even though the Kappa Sigma house is no longer on the list of condemned houses, it will undergo another $5,000 worth of renovations this semester, Hinkle said.

"There has been an accumulation of wear and tear on the house for about 10 years," he said. "Renovation needed and needs to be done."

The renovation effort has had a postive effect on the fraternity, Hinkle said.

"The repair work really has made our house a little more livable and enjoyable," Hinkle said. "I think, in a way, that the pressure from the town has helped us move as a house and as a town to one of better upkeep."

Cutter Davis, president of Kappa Alpha order, also said renovation was necessary. "We had to get fire extinguishers, replace windows and get screens," he said.

Davis said the repairs did not require a large amount of money, but what was needed was provided by the fraternity's alumni.

Wall said he inspects the houses when the housing department receives complaints from citizens that the houses seem unsafe or are very unattractive.

"We were originally concerned with eliminating safety hazards, but we are also concerned with the looks of the town as a whole," Wall said.

Smith named ACC's top coach

From Associated Press reports

North Carolina basketball head coach Dean Smith, who guided the Tar Heels to first place in the Atlantic Coast Conference regular season, has been selected ACC coach of the year by the Atlantic Coast Sports Writers Association.

Smith edged N.C. State's Jim Valvano by a 39-38 vote. Georgia Tech's Bobby Cremins got 15 votes, and Maryland's Bob Wade had 14.

Mike Krzyzewski of Duke and Bob Staak of Wake Forest got seven votes apiece.

Smith, in his 27th year at North Carolina, was named coach of the year for the seventh time. It was the first time he has taken the ACSWA award since 1979 after previous honors in 1967, 1968, 1971, 1976 and 1977.

No other ACC coach has been named coach of the year in the ACSWA more than three times.

North Carolina finished the regular season at 24-6 and lost the ACC title game to Duke 65-61. The Tar Heels open their 14th straight postseason in the NCAA on Thursday against North Texas State in the West Regional at Salt Lake City.

Ferry, a 6-foot-10 junior from Bowie, Md., received 90 of 125 votes, easily surpassing J.R. Reid, who collected 25 votes. Georgia Tech's Tom Hammonds got eight votes, and Duane Ferrell received two votes.

Ferry is the league's leading scorer at 19.3 points per game and leads the Blue Devils in rebounding at 7.3 per game and free-throw accuracy — 83.3 percent.

Ferry scored 19 points and grabbed 10 rebounds in leading Duke to a 65-61 victory over North Carolina Sunday in the championship game of the ACC Tournament.

The only other Duke player to receive the award in the past 22 years is Mike Gminski, who was named player of the year in 1979.

Netters drop tough one to State, 6-3

By STEPHEN GILES
Staff Writer

The UNC men's tennis team battled the frigid weather as well as a slow start in taking on arch-rival N.C. State in its first ACC match of the year on Wednesday.

However, the Tar Heels' efforts all went for naught, as State came away with an impressive 6-3 victory, improving its record to 9-2, 1-0 in the conference, and UNC dropped to 6-5, 0-1 on the year.

"It was a tight match," Wolfpack coach Henry Crawford said. "There were two three-set matches which could have gone either way. Luckily, we won both of them, but you must realize that they are really beaten up."

Tar Heel coach Allen Morris agreed with Crawford. "Well, two of our best players (David Pollack and Jimmy Weilbaecher) are out for the year," he said. "But we are not using that as an excuse. N.C. State really has an excellent team."

The Wolfpack got off to a good start by taking the No. 1 singles match, as Kristo Larzon defeated Don Johnson 6-3, 7-6. State went on to post wins at the No. 4 and 5 seeds, with Michael Gilbert rocking UNC's John Bristow 6-1, 6-2 and Eddie Gonzalez downing Andre Janasik by the same score.

The Tar Heels responded by taking a victory at No. 3, where Thomas Tanner blasted Lou Horwitz 6-1, 6-1. Another win came at No. 6 when Weilbaecher downed Rob Atkinson 6-2, 6-4. Then, in what would turn out to be the pivotal singles match, State's Alfonso Ochoa outlasted James Krege 6-1, 6-7, 6-2 at No. 2.

Going into the doubles action, the Tar Heels would have to win all three remaining matches to pull out the victory. While the young Tar Heels gave it a great effort, the more experienced Wolfpack took two of the three matches to get the win.

N.C. State's team of Larzon and Horwitz took out Johnson and Tanner 6-1, 7-5 at No. 1, while Ochoa and Gilbert got past UNC's Krege and Bristow 7-5, 1-6, 6-2 at No. 2. UNC posted its only doubles victory as the tandem of Janasik and David Kessler fought past State's Gonzalez and Matt Price 7-5, 7-6.

"I'm very proud of our guys," Morris said. "Down 4-2, we really responded and put up a fight to win all of the doubles. But we are extremely inexperienced, and it was tough to expect to pull out all three doubles matches. Overall, State just played better."
