UNC fencers foiled at NCAA Tournament

By BRENDAN MATHEWS

"Some days you have it, some days you don't," UNC fencing coach Ron Miller said of his team's up-and-down performance at last week's NCAA Tournament. Unfortunately for 9-7. Miller and the rest of the Tar Heels, they too often didn't have it, as the women finished 10th and the men a distant 16th.

finish relied on a victory over ninthseeded Harvard in the first match of Round One, but the Heels were unable to string together the wins.

"I don't know if we weren't ready or the team didn't come together or what," junior Alicia Foster said. "But we certainly didn't do as well as we'd expected to."

North Carolina still had a shot at the top bracket, but it meant knocking off eventual national champion Wayne State. Although the Heels made a remarkable turnaround from their first match performance, the squad of juniors Foster, Ashley Grabs and Cheryl Gates and seniors Lorraine Leigh and Mary Ronald came up short and headed into Tuesday's competition hoping for ninth place.

They started off strong, wiping out

Ohio State and setting up a match experience hurt the Heels' chances in with Yale. However, the Ivy League would continue to frustrate UNC, as Yale jumped out to a 6-0 lead. The Heels staged a comeback, but it wasn't enough, as they eventually fell

"We fenced well but we just couldn't get started," Miller said. "It was a case of too little, too late."

Miller said this rollercoaster ride The women's hopes for a top-five of a performance was the team's downfall. "Against Harvard, our one and two weren't at full strength, but our three and four were," he said. "Against Yale, it was the other way around. There were some good individual performances, but in general we were inconsistent."

> Junior Cheryl Gates said the disappointing finish didn't take away from the sense of accomplishment at having made the tournament. "One of our main goals at the beginning of the season was to get to the NCAAs," she said. "And that was accomplished."

Inconsistency also plagued the men's squad, a team of six with only one fencer, sophomore Pete Farquhar, with previous tournament experience. Junior epee fencer Ravi Sawhney admitted that this lack of Princeton.

"We were pretty inexperienced," he said. "Only one of us had ever been there before. We just weren't used to that level of competition."

The men's tournament, unlike the women's, is a more individual competition. The fencers compete in pools according to weapon, relying on luck of the draw to determine who they will face. The scores of the fencers are added to those of their teammates at the end of the tournament, and the winning team is named based on these cumulative scores.

However, only the score of the top finisher in each weapon from each team is counted. This system rewards "superstar" teams that rely on one or two outstanding performers while punishing those schools who focus on depth.

UNC, a team with a number of talented fencers but no superstars, is one of the latter. This is evidenced by the fact that the school qualified six - Farquhar and Sawhney (epee), Dave Merkel and Phil Moschella (foil), and Paul LeBlanc and Greg Jackson (saber) - the maximum one team may send. But the structure of the tournament favors schools like Wayne State, which boasts two topranked European athletes.

Miller is acutely aware of this fact, and he questions the results of the tournament as a way to determine the nation's top teams.

"As a team we're capable of the top 10," he said. "This tournament is not an accurate measure of team strength."

As it turned out, the Tar Heels ended up back in the pack with a performance that Miller called acceptable, but not good." The team's top individual finisher was freshman Merkel, who placed 18th in the foil division.

Miller had looked to the epee team of Sawhney and Farquhar, who had been among the school's most consistent all year, to carry over their lateseason success into the NCAAs. But waiting around for their chance to fence may have dulled the pair's attacks.

"I think the time to wait hurt the epee," Miller said. "They didn't fence until Saturday, so they were waiting for two days."

Sawhney agreed that the time leading up to the tournament was a factor.

"Coach had to leave a week before to go up with the women's team, while we stayed here for a few more days," he said. "Other schools have assistant coaches, but we were kind of on our own."

However, Sawhney and other members of the team refused to make excuses for their performance. "We had a rough go of it," Sawhney said. "Nobody really fenced that poorly. We faced tough competition, and we just weren't at the top of our game." Jackson admitted that he was disappointed with the way the Tar Heels finished. "As a whole we didn't do as well as we hoped we'd do," he said. "I don't think anybody was really pleased with how they did."

But all is not gloom and misery

Baseball streaks past N.C. State to 11th straight win

From staff reports

UNC's baseball team continued its impressive win streak this weekend, taking its 10th and 11th straight victories by downing ACC rivals Duke and N.C. State.

With the wins, North Carolina improved its season record to 16-8 overall, 3-0 in the ACC.

Saturday in Boshamer Stadium, the Tar Heels downed the Blue Devils 3-1 behind the six-hit pitching of John Thoden.

The two squads went seven innings without scoring until the Tar Heels picked up two runs in that stanza, which was all they would need. Jesse Levis walked to lead off the inning and moved to third on a hit-and-run single by Dave Arendas.

With one out and Mike Trombley on in relief of starter Troy Blackburn, the Blue Devils drew in their infield to prevent any Tar Heel scoring, but UNC right fielder Brad Woodall stopped that strategy by driving a single up the middle to score both Levis and Arendas.

The Tar Heels put the game out of reach by scoring in the eighth on Levis' RBI single that drove in third baseman Darin Campbell.

Duke scored their lone run in the ninth when first baseman John Furch homered to deep center.

game of his career. Duke fell to to 7-16, 0-1.

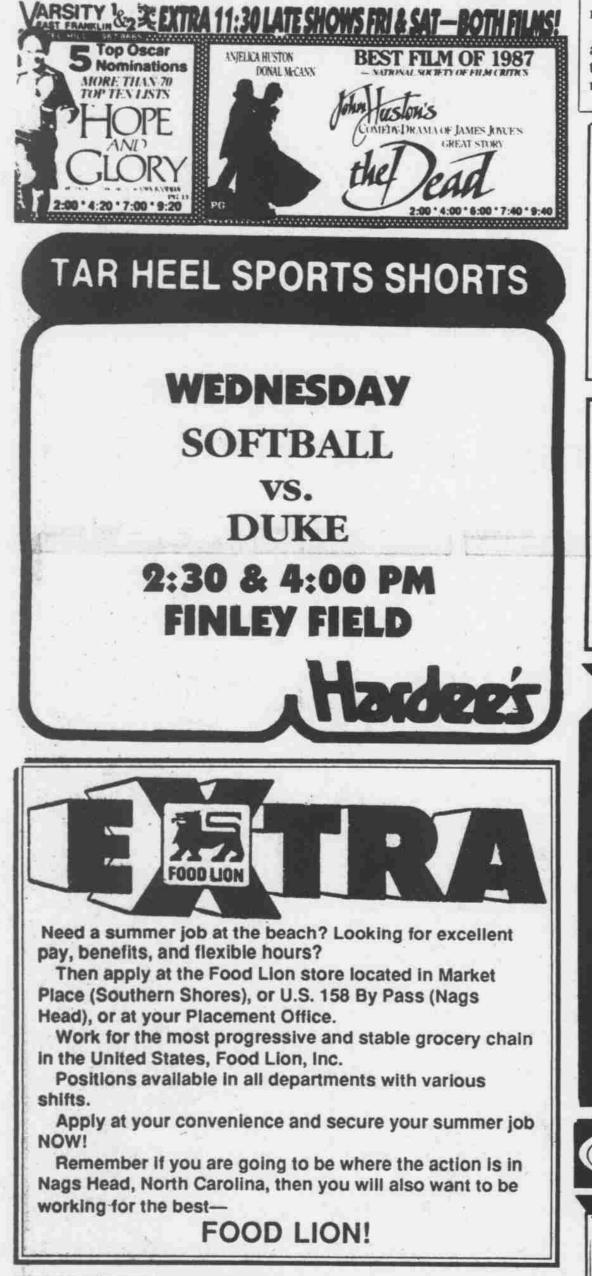

On Sunday, UNC exploded for a five-run first inning and ran off with a 7-5 victory over N.C. State.

State starting pitcher Jeff Hartsock entered Sunday's game in Raleigh with a 6-0 record. He left with this year's initial blemish. surrendering four straight singles to open the game. Tar Heels Tom Nevin, Campbell, Chris DeFranco and Ron Maurer rapped consecutive hits to make it 2-0. Woodall followed with a two-run single to right.

North Carolina starter Michael Hoog went all the way for his fourth complete game of the season. The sophomore lefthander, who improved his record to 5-2, had eight strikeouts, including State's Bryn Kosco for the final out of the game with Wolfpack runners on first and second and Kosco representing the potential winning run.

State scored its first run in the fifth, another in the sixth and three in the eighth. Designated hitter Dell Ahalt led the Wolfpack with two homers and three runs batted in.

UNC added another run in the fifth on a two-out double to right by Chris Lauria and Jesse Levis' RBI single. In the ninth, Campbell delivered a solo homer to left, his seventh dinger of the year. State dropped to 23-8 overall,
