Congress

ization receives information in the same manner from a host of other groups, Suggs said.

Because the opinions of congress members differ from year to year, it isn't possible to determine if SETA is more politically active than the CGLA, Ferris said. Another problem is that the by-laws don't specifically define "politically partisan," he said. "Some construe it to mean taking any political stand," Ferris said, and that was the view the congress took in regard to SETA.

SETA was disadvantaged, Workman said, because of the vague specifications of "politically partisan."

"The congress does groups a disservice by not having more objective standards," she said.

Although the group's political nature was the official reason SETA was denied funds, another reason was that organizations supported by student fees should benefit students, Ferris said.

"SETA is standing up for animal rights, but there are plenty of student concerns that are more important," he said.

McNeill said the congress didn't give his argument about the CGLA's political partisanship enough attention because it sympathizes with the CGLA.

"People were biased, and went in with preconceived ideas of how they were going to vote," he said.

Charlotte.

"Nuclear weapons are good if they are retaliatory in nature," Burgess said.

The United States has the upper hand now, because the Soviets have spent 15 times as much as the United States on space defense systems research but have no results, said Steven Dolley, a graduate in speech communications from Williston, Vt.

But if the United States deploys an SDI system, it would be seen as a threat to the Soviets and perpetuate a greater arms race, Dolley said. The United States should give up SDI in favor of reducing land-based nuclear weapons, he said.

"A bargaining chip is no good unless you're willing to cash it in," Dolley said.

Burgess agreed that SDI is a bargaining chip but said it would be a more effective negotiation tool if it is deployed.

"The problem of verification thwarts any chance of a major reduction of land-based nuclear weapons," Burgess said. "SDI could force those kinds of concessions."

"We would be like Darth Vader in the eyes of the Soviets," Dolley said. "We would have a helmet and a sword."

He said the company will also phase out iron-on transfers within a couple of years, leaving the store selling merchandise purchased from outside companies only.

Helpingstine said the University's lawsuit has had no negative effects on sales during the nine months since it was filed.

"Business has been great," he said. "It's our understanding that we have a large majority of the people on our side."

Helpingstine said he had contacted a few prospective buyers, but he would not name the parties.

Sports

Baseball drops 2 to No. 1 OSU

From staff reports

Playing the top team in the land is usually a hard thing to do, as the UNC baseball team found out Monday and Tuesday.

The Tar Heels were in Stillwater, Okla., facing the Oklahoma State Cowboys, who boast of an incredible 37-2 record. Monday, the Cowboys rolled up a 12-0 lead en route to a 19-6 spanking of UNC.

Sophomore All-American third baseman Robin Ventura drilled two home runs in the contest as Oklahoma State scored in every inning, amassing six homers and 22 hits.

Tar Heel sophomore Michael Hoog took the loss to fall to 7-4 on the year. The Cowboys ripped him for 10 runs in 5 1/3 innings.

Ventura set an NCAA record last year as a freshman by hitting in 58 straight games. Interestingly, he started that streak after going 0-for-4 against UNC in a 9-8 Cowboy win. He is currently hitting .387, which is only fourth best on the OSU team.

Monday, the 1987 Player of the Year ripped a solo dinger in the first inning and added another in the fifth, followed by homers by Monte Fariss and Ray Ortiz.

The Tar Heels got on the board in the seventh, when Jesse Levis homered over the scoreboard in right field.

UNC almost knocked off the Cowboys Tuesday, but fell 8-6 instead. Designated hitter Adam Smith's eighth-inning two-run homer, his second two-run blast of the game, was the difference.

The Tar Heels jumped out to an early 3-0 lead, due to Tom Nevin's solo homer to right to start off the game and Chris Lauria's RBI single in the first inning. Bobby Honeycutt drilled an RBI single in the second for the third run.

The Cowboys tied things up in the fourth when Ortiz' single plated Ventura, who had doubled, and Smith roped his first homer of the game over the rightfield fence.

Nevin scored in the fifth for the Tar Heels after OSU starting pitcher Tim Pugh made an error, but Fariss laced a two-run single in the Cowboys' half of the inning to give OSU its first lead of the game.

A Chris DeFranco solo shot to right tied things up at 6-6 in the seventh, and after Ventura brought in yet another run with a sacrifice fly that Nevin climbed the leftfield fence to haul in, Levis tied it again in the eighth with a solo shot to left-center, setting up Smith's heroics.

In the Tar Heels' last gasp, Nevin doubled to lead off the inning, but Carl Myers came in to pitch to DeFranco, and he grounded out. David Mlick then got Dave Arendas to fly out, and Ron Gerstein got Levis to ground out to short to end the game.

Freshman Kreg Gresham (1-3) picked up the loss for the Tar Heels, despite giving up only one hit, Smith's two-run dinger, in four innings of work. Jim Dougherty started and went the first five frames, giving up just six hits. Pugh was the winner for the Cowboys (9-0), and Gerstein saved his first game of the year.

With the losses, the Tar Heels fell to 24-18 on the year.

Stats prove that Chamberlain was basketball's greatest

Keith Parsons Opinion

Bingo.

As Pollack writes in his letter, the caption was not only misleading, but totally erroneous. Pollack gives the following facts.

In the 142 times Russell and Chamberlain faced each other, Chamberlain scored 4,077 points and grabbed 4,072 rebounds. For those of you who are not math majors, that works out to 28.7 points and 28.7 rebounds a game. On the other hand, Russell managed only about half as many points (2,060) and pulled down 3,373 boards. This is 14.5 points a game and 23.7 rebounds a contest. It is easy to see who got the better of whom.

Here is some more evidence to support my claim that Chamberlain was better than Russell, and therefore the greatest player ever. And I do not want anyone to even mention Kareem Abdul-Jabbar.

On Nov. 24, 1960, against Russell, Chamberlain cleaned the glass for 55 'bounds, an NBA record. Also, even though Russell is widely recognized as the greatest defensive player ever, Wilt once poured in 62 points against him. The best Russell could do against Chamberlain was 37.

I was reading a book by Red Auerbach recently where Auerbach himself said Russell was "the greatest rebounder to ever live." Auerbach went on to say, "And don't give me any of that crap about Chamberlain's numbers."

Okay, Red, sure. Just because Chamberlain outrebounded your man Russell in 95 of the 142 games they played against each other does not mean he outrebounded him. Say what?

So that means just because Chamberlain is the second-leading scorer in NBA history, that does not mean he is the second-leading scorer in NBA history. Right? Come on Red, get a clue.

In defense of Sports Illustrated, the magazine did list the fact that Russell and the Boston Celtics won nine NBA championships from 1959 (Chamberlain's rookie year) to 1969 (Russell's last as a player).

Following that theory, Ernie Banks, the great Chicago Cub shortstop of yesteryear, was not as good a player as, say, Bucky Dent, the Yankee player at short during the New York dynasty. After all, Banks never won a championship.

At least Chamberlain won one during the Russell/Celtic era and added one more in the early 1970s while playing for the Los Angeles Lakers.

Did you notice something in my last sentence? Instead of simply writing "the Russell era," I added "Celtic." This is because the two go hand in hand. Even Auerbach, in his book, admits Russell would probably not have been such a great player if he played for a team other than Boston.

While at Boston, Russell played with such legendary players as Bob Cousy, Bill Sharman, John Havlicek, K.C. Jones and Sam Jones. The only years Chamberlain had this kind of support, he won the championship, too. In those winning years, Chamberlain played alongside players like Chet Walker, Hal Greer, Jerry West and Elgin Baylor.

As Walter Bingham points out in his NBA playoffs article in this week's SI, of Russell's seven victories over Chamberlain in the NBA playoffs, four series went to the seventh and deciding game. The margin of victory in those four games was nine points.

I have just one last thought on the subject. Chamberlain was a great player on his own, while Russell needed the Celtic name behind him to reach the same level.

Reid picks up 4 hoops awards

From staff reports

J.R. Reid won four awards and Jeff Lebo and Ranzino Smith picked up three apiece at North Carolina's annual basketball banquet Monday night.

In voting by his teammates, Reid was named most valuable player for the past season. He also won honors as the team's top rebounder, drawing the most charges and overall statistical leader.

Lebo took the Foy Roberson Award as the team's most inspirational player. He also won awards for leading the team in assists and took the athletic director's scholar-athlete award.

Smith was named the team's permanent captain, in addition to awards for most outstanding senior and leading the team in free-throw shooting.

Junior Steve Bucknall was named the team's best defensive player and top screener. Rick Fox won as outstanding freshman and for leading the team in field-goal percentage, and Scott Williams was named leading shot blocker.

In other basketball news, Reid, Lebo and Williams were among 93 players invited by ABAUSA Monday to attend the 1988 men's Olympic basketball trials.

The trials will begin May 18 at the Olympic Training Center. Between 30 and 40 players will be named for the final two days of trials, which will include a doubleheader at McNichols Arena in Denver on May 22.

On May 24, about 20 players will be invited to continue training at Georgetown University in mid-July. The final team of 12 players will be determined before Sept. 2 for the Seoul Olympics, with Georgetown's John Thompson serving as head coach.

Alonzo Mourning of Indian River (Va.) High School was the only prep player invited. Mourning will attend Georgetown next year.
